The August number of the Trade circular of this popular firm is before us. Their business was established in Edinburgh in 1809, by the late Mr. Miller, and has been steadily growing for the last three quarters of a century, until now over one thousands persons are employed in the various departments, and everything that is required for the pleasing of a printing office is made on the premises. The circular contains an interesting and instructive article on the history and progress of type founding and printing, and some fine impressions of fancy type and borders. After the St. John fire, the Toronto branch of the firm supplied complete outfits for some of the largest offices in that city. The California branch of the house in San Francisco, does an extensive trade on the Pacific Coast and in the Western states, which is a guarantee of the excellence of its productions in the face of the large competition throughout the Union.

"A Darned Fool."

This is by no means the worst story we have read of the brave old Admiral Napier. When Sir Charles Napier was in command of the Channel squadron before the Russian war he one day with the fleet off Queenston. He, with his officers, were invited during their stay to be the constant guests of the Earl of P., and the castle was lively for a while with blue and gold uniforms. One night the family assembled in the castle for family prayers before retiring, as was the custom of the household; and of the ladies read a chapter in the bible, and then the Earl prayed. On the special evening in question the chapter chanced to be the account of St. Paul's shipwreck, and Lady F. was reading it. The admiral, hearing something about nautical affairs, listened with rapt attention until Lady Flora read, "They cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day." "Darned fool," exclaimed the admiral, who had completely forgotten everything except the fact that a great error in seamanship had been committed. When he again realized his surroundings he said, "I really beg your Lordship's pardon, and crave that of the ladies, but the man was a fool, and it's a wonder he didn't tear the whole stern out of her." The apology, amid much suppressed mirth was accepted.

Public Bathing.

A complaint has been made, of a lot of young bloods, (high toned roosters), who were bathing opposite Stevenson's Mill, and who, although they saw their approach, made no effort to hide themselves from a party of ladies and gentlemen who were passing in a row boat, but sported around like so many dolphins, while others stood on the dock with a covering more scanty than nice. Now, we are certain that the boating party had no desire to study comparative anatomy, as displayed by these aquatic rascals, and in future it is to be hoped that bathers will have natural modesty enough to hide themselves when boats and steamers are passing. Several similar complaints have been made this season, and all about the same locality.

My house was a little paradise till my daughter-in-law was brought home. I think where a son takes a wife to his mother's home, if she is the right kind of a woman it is no trouble to get along. Don't marry until you have a home of your own to take a wife to. Don't give your poor mother, who has nursed you in your infancy—idolized you—any cause for trouble; let her go to her grave in peace. ITS EFFECTS UPON LABOUR AND CAPITAL.

Speaking of the effect of high taxation, consequent upon municipal extravagance and debt, upon the labour and capital of a State, the Hon. William Lawrence said at Urbana, Ohio, recently, "The high rate of taxes in our villages and cities keeps out and drives out population, capital and manufacturing enterprises, which cannot prosper under three per cent of taxes. This leaves capital and population unemployed, and they do not hesitate to emigrate. Two years ago a farmer near one of our cities, seeking to relieve age from care, sold his farm for $20,000, intending to loan his money at interest. He found that if he went into the city his taxes would be $600 a year. He left Ohio for a less taxed State, and we lost a Republican voter, his capital, and the taxes he would have paid had they been less onerous. Ohio has lost a half a million of people, who have left it or been kept out by high taxes, besides untold millions of capital which now might be invested in manufactures in mining, in building and other pursuits, giving employment and decent wages to multitudes of mechanics and laborers who are now unemployed or inadequately paid for their services."

Seed Wheat.

Mr. Wm. Rennie, the well known seedsman of Toronto, has issued a circular to his customers setting forth the superior claims of his seed wheat, its large yield, and adaptability to our climate, and for which he received two medals and a diploma at the Centennial. Recognizing the necessity of keeping up the standard of our Fall Wheat, he continues to test annually, many new varieties of which large proportions have proved nothing superior to the best varieties previously in cultivation and he has discarded them as unworthy of introduction. Hardiness, quality, productiveness, etc., have to be considered in securing a reliable change of grain. The Seneca (Clawson) and Silver Chaff varieties have stood the test as valuable varieties under varying conditions and can be confidently recommended for general cultivation. His stock of Fall Wheat, having been carefully harvested from select seed, is worthy of consideration.

Miller & Richards-Type Founders.

The August number of the Trade Circular of this popular firm is before us. Their business was established in Edinburgh in 1809, by the late Mr. Miller, and has been steadily growing for the last thirty quarters of a century, until now over one thousand persons are employed in the various departments, and everything that is required for the printing of a printing office is made on the premises. The circular contains an interesting and instructive article on the history and progress of type founding and printing, and some fine impressions of fancy type and borders. After the St. John fire, the Toronto branch of the firm supplied complete outfits for some of the largest offices in that city. The California branch of the house in San Francisco, does an extensive trade on the Pacific Coast and in the Western States, which is a guarantee of the excellence of its productions in the face of the large competition throughout the Union.

"A Darned Fool."

This is by no means the worst story I have read of the brave old Admiral Napier. When Sir Charles Napier was command of the Chinnel squadron before the Russian war he one day with a fleet off Queenston. He, with his lieutenants, were invited during their stay to the constant guests of the Earl of P., and the castle was lively for a while with no and gold uniforms. One night the family assembled in the castle for family prayers before retiring, as was the custom of the household; and of the ladies read chapter in the bible, and then the Earl prayed. On the special evening in question the chapter chanted to be the account of St. Paul's shipwreck, and Lady was reading it. The admiral, hearing nothing about nautical affairs, listened with rapt attention until Lady Flora read, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day. "Darned fool," claimed the admiral, who had completely forgotten everything except the fact that a great error in seamanship had been committed. When he again realized his surroundings he said, "I really beg your Lordship's pardon, and crave that the ladies, but the man was a fool, and as a wonder he didn't tear the whole run out of her." The apology, amid much suppressed mirth was accepted.

Mother-in-Law Speaks For Herself.

The Chicago Tribune prints a communication from a lady residing in Daypoport, Iowa, who writes to the following purport: "I have a few words I would like to say in regard to daughters-in-law. I have seen several articles in the papers against mothers-in-law, but it very seldom you see one against daughters-in-law. Now, I am a persecuted mother-in-law. My house was a little paradise till my daughter-in-law was brought home. I think where a son takes a wife to his mother's home, if she is the right kind of a woman, it is no trouble to get along. There are some evil ones. I own parent's life with. They get married, and go to live with their husband's folks, and if they live like cats and dogs it is all laid to the poor mother-in-law, when they are the evil ones. For my part I have a great deal of sympathy for mothers-in-law, and I think you will, too, if you were in my place. Here is my advice I would like to give young men. Don't marry until you have a home of your own to take a wife to, and give your poor mother, who has raised you in your infancy, a home to any cause for trouble; let her go to a grave in peace. How many families are there whose homes were a little Eden till a daughter-in-law was taken in the family."

High Taxation.

EFFECTS UPON LABOUR AND CAPITAL.
Speaking of the effect of high taxation, consequent upon municipal extravagance and debt, upon the labour and capital of State, the Hon. William Lawrence said, Urbana, Ohio, recently, "The high rate of taxes in our villages and cities expel and drive out population, retail and manufacturing enterprises, which cannot prosper under three per cent of taxes. This leaves capital and population unemployed, and they do not sitate to emigrate. Two years ago a merchant near one of our cities, seeking to leave age from care, sold his farm for 1,000, intending to loan his money at interest. He found that if he went into the city his taxes would be $600 a year. He left Ohio for a less taxed State, and was a Republican voter, his capital, and taxes he would have paid had they been less onerous. Ohio has lost a half million of people, who have left it or are kept out by high taxes, besides und millions of capital which now might be invested in manufactures, in mining, building and other pursuits, giving employment and most wages to multitudes of mechanics and laborers who are now employed or inadequately paid for their services."

The N. Y. Times, in an extended business review, reports city merchants not generally complaining. Improvement is noticed in the dry goods, hat, grocery, clothing, leather shoe, and piano trades. The depression continues in iron and metals.

The competitive examination for Congressman Muller's West Point cadetship resulted in the selection of Charles Minnie, a coloured boy born in Troy, who stood highest among eleven competitors. John Morrissey contributes $50 to furnishing an outfit for the successful student.

Contracts are being made at Oshawa for full delivery of potatoes at forty cents per bushel. The crop is expected to yield pretty well, some farmers estimating that they have three hundred bushels to the acre. This is a pretty high figure, but the crop is generally reported to be far better than last year's.

Pauperism and crime in Ireland were never so low as now; the just issued report of the poor law board for 1876 attesting to a steady decrease in the one, and the fact that the just closing assizes in a population of 5,300,000 have witnessed no capital conviction indicating the lessening of the other.

The lockout of ship-builders on the Clyde Scotland, has virtually ended. The masters to-day decided to open the works on Tuesday, at the old rate of wages, pending a settlement of the dispute by arbitration, to which both parties agreed to submit. The masters and men will meet immediately to settle a basis of arbitration.

Whitby, with a population of 8,500, has up to this time, given 635 signers to the Murphy pledge. The work begun by Mr. J. W. Donan, seven weeks ago, goes bravely on, two meetings weekly being sustained by the Whitby Gospel Temperance Association. Many hard drinkers are keeping this pledge.

The new Convention between Great Britain and Egypt entirely prohibits the export or import of negro slaves. Egyptian slave traders will be tried by court martial as assassins. Foreigners will be handed over to their own tribunals. British cruisers are authorized to capture slave ships hoisting the Egyptian flag. The Khedive engages to abolish all private traffic in slaves in Egypt within seven years, and within twelve years in Soudan and the frontier provinces.

OUTRAGEOUS.—On Friday evening 16th, a number of young men in Belleville, enticed a girl named Emsley, who is said to be half-witted, away from her home. They took her to Zwick's Island and most cruelly outraged the poor creature. The police found her in an almost nude state and suffering severely from her injuries.  Ninety per cent. of our people can, with all that the whole people can consume.

 That means that thirty-six millions can produce all that forty millions can use must remain idle and are condemned to beggary or starvation. If the work-for the repeal of restrictive laws on foreign

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC

Birds as Helps to Farmers.

The Lenawee Farmer's Club, of Michigan have been lately discussing the question of birds as helps to farmers. Mr. Madison Graves read an essay on the cut-worm, in which he acknowledged the importance of bird help, in exterminating not only the cut-worm but a great many others which feed upon vegetation. The discussion elicited the fact from Mr. F. F. Moore that he had taken the chipmunk, with large numbers of cut worms in its chops. Mr. B. W. Steerre commanded Mr. Graves in his advocacy of birds. This he thought was an important point to gain. He commended the little wren, for its insect-eating proclivities and war waged against the blue jay for their pugnacity to other birds.

Upon this question the Prairie Farmer would remark, that indomitable knowledge by the mass of farmers upon the habits of birds, leads many to destroy their best friends. The crow is usually considered a common nuisance by the farmers. If protected, they would be one of the most persistent destroyers of insect life in the larva state. As it is, they do what they can by stealth. The larva of one insect killed prevents the laying of many eggs. What the crow, and many insectivorous birds do for the farmer, they have to accomplish early in the morning and late at night, when the farmer is taking his ease.

The crow—black bird is also under a ban. Why? Like the crow it will pull corn when other food fails; and yet, every common sense farmer knows that the corn field may be easily protected against the depredations of each, and every bird.

The sparrows are persistent destroyers of small moths and millers. We have seen one of them seize a white miller moth while flying, quickly tear the wings from the body, and after carefully pinching the insect from end, fly off in triumph with the prize to its nest.

All our singing birds are great insect destroyers. The soft billed birds live almost exclusively on insect life, and those known as hard-billed birds, so feed to a great degree. All our prairie birds, that is, those which nest on our prairies—are insect eaters, many of them exclusively so, and, as incidental to the bird question, we may mention the toad. All the garter snakes, the weasel the skunk, and, in fact, all the wild animals classed as vermin, should be placed with all the large class of cannibal insects which are usually classed by the ordinary observer with insects depredating upon crops.

If the rudiments of the natural sciences bearing upon botany, ornithology, and entomology, so far as they embrace a knowledge of the habits, characteristics, and instincts of animal and vegetable life, were taught in the common schools, our youth might easily arrive at tolerably correct conclusions in relation to animals, herbs, and insects, injurious and beneficial.

It is fully as necessary that farmers know something of their animal friends and enemies as that they know all about the cultivation of plants. If it were the case that they had certain knowledge in the direction of insect and other friends and enemies; had more birds and what are known as verminous animals; and less of insect enemies to prey upon and destroy the result of labor that has taken months of toil, the result of which count only on the wrong side of the ledger, we believe that in time many obnoxious pests might be so far exterminated as to do but little harm.—Prairie Farmer.

Interest to the Young Folks.

A farmer near my former home encouraged all his boys and girls to have some little projected enterprise of their own on hand. Even the little ones had wife to help him get a living instead of one to hang ribbons on and pour patent medicines into, would just go down to your city and find a good, strong, vigorous, and industrious and frugal Irish or German girl, he would find his farm would pay better than it does now, and his children would be likely to be worth ten times as much as farmers as will be any of the next generation of pure bred Yankees."

Street Beggars

THEIR NUMBER CONSTANTLY INCREASING.

(From the Globe.)

The people of Toronto do not need to be told that the city is overstocked with street-beggars and vagrants. One cannot pass along a leading thoroughfare without meeting half a dozen or more of them. Where do they all come from? Is more easily asked than answered; but this much is known; that street-begging is a profession, that it pays well, and that most of those who follow it are foreigners.

The most objectionable class of these beggars is that made up of those who occupy corners of streets, turn hand-organs, and display placards invoking charity by reason of blindness or other misfortune. They are all imposters who live on and make money out of a gullible public. One of the most successful of these was a man who for days sat on Yonge-street turning an organ, and wearing a plate on which was painted on one side a boiler or other engine bursting with apparent terrible effect, wounding several men, and on the other a physician standing by a sick man's bed—around which stood a wife and seven small children weeping—in the act of feeling the patient's eyes, and telling him that his sight was beyond recovery. Of course, the idea conveyed to the sympathetic spectator (almost always a woman) is that the organ-grinder is the person who was wounded by the explosion and pronounced blind by the oculist who occupies the foreground at the other side of the picture. This man was led up—whether he needed to be led is doubtful—to his stand on Yonge-street by his wife, and left there till evening, when he was guided whence he came. He was very energetic in extracting music from his organ, and well he might, for a day never passed without his receipts running beyond five dollars. He was a thorough business man, and like other business men, he opened his shop on Saturday night, and did a roaring trade. This poor-man-who-lost-his-sight-by-an-explosion system is just now the most popular form of imposture. Men with similar placards are to be found in every city that will permit them to remain. We read that a Chicago painter is making a fortune out of these plates. The other day a second "blind man," wearing one of the latter arrived in town, and took up his position on Yonge-street. He must not have been so successful as his predecessor—probably the public saw the swindle—as he left after a short stay amongst us.

Another barefaced fraud is a withered hag who sits on Yonge-street—and has been there for months—with an organ, and placard telling in English and German lettering that she had her hand burnt off—at the same time showing the stump—in Chicago, when Mr. Leary's cow brought destruction on that city. She is getting rich, and no wonder she remains in Toronto. She went up to Hamilton for a few days lately, but returned soon after to this city. While there a young woman, a farmer's wife, and lately married, came into town, and while passing along the street where this old hag was stationed, the latter thrust forth her stump of a hand and demanded assistance. The young woman was of a delicate temperament, and the sight of the scarred stump

A farmer near my former home encouraged all his boys and girls to have some little projected enterprise of their own on hand. Even the little ones had their hills of pop-corn which they learned to cultivate and when the grain was dried it was shelled by their own hands, and then popped and stored in bags, ready when the market waggons went to the city. Every week the farmer drove his market wagon into Philadelphia, and whatever the children had to sell was disposed of to the best advantage, and the money carefully counted out to them on his return. You will hardly find a thrifter happier, or more intelligent farmer's family. Each had an interest in his own, yet all worked together most harmoniously. With their combined savings and a little help from mother, they bought a nice melodeon, on which the boys learned to play as well as the girls. The value of such a possession in refining and elevating a family of children cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. It was the aim of the whole household to make home pleasant, and farm life to them was the most delightful in the world. There is little probability of their sons going into other pursuits as they grow up. They have found farming too pleasant, profitable and healthful to take their chances at something else about which they know nothing.

Make the farm house pleasant; plant trees about in abundance, ornamental as well as fruit trees. Oh, these bleak, bad, red painted houses, "blistering in the sun," which we see dotting so many wide farms, are a disgrace to the land. No wonder that we find within.

"Shrill, querulous women, our and sullen men
Untidy and old before their time.
With scarce a human interest save their own,
Monotonous round of small economies,
Or the poor scandal of the neighborhood."

Don't let the children's minds be narrowed down to the petty concerns of their small world, but give them books and good newspapers in abundance which shall furnish a bright outlook to the great beaming world which lies beyond and around them, so near and yet so far away without this medium of communication with it. A home without newspapers is almost as cheerless as a house without windows.

While you make it a rule that the boys shall not loiter around stores and saloons in the evening, be sure it is a useful entertainment, like an evening concert, instructive panorama or lecture comes to your village, give all a chance to attend. Scrape up the money somehow, if you hurry off a pair of fat chickens to market to get it. Farmers' folks have the least excuse of any for denying their children these advantages, for they are great advantages in many respects, and not the least among them is the happiness they afford and the store of pleasant memories

The young woman was of a delicate temperament, and the sight of the scarred stump shocked her nervous system. Soon after she was confined, her child being a pretty little girl, but without any hands. Several people are known to have been turned sick by the appearance of this woman as she displays her stump. Her hand, and not her face, is her future.

Two young women, also foreigners, were around lately with an organ and a pitiful yarn. There were also impostors, and should have been put in gaol and set to work in the laundry. A Franco-German-war-widow with five children sitting round her organ is the latest addition to Yonge-street.

Italians form a large percentage of the loafing population of the city. There is a colony of them up in St. John's Ward. The most respectable business any of them follows is keeping a peanut stand, while the majority of them go round with harps and fiddles or stand at street corners with birds telling fortunes. These latter are able-bodied young men, who prefer living on foolish people than by honest work.

All these imposters have large numbers of children with them. Whether they are their own or not is a question; but if they are, it might be used against their alleged physical weakness, or else the assertion that the last thing nature or accident takes away from humanity in its procreative faculties must be accepted as a fact. But the most serious thing about these children is that they are all brought up to the profession of their guardians or parents. No one of them is set at a trade. The Italian boy is initiated into the mysteries of a triangle and then a fiddle. One of the women often seen on Yonge-street with a little girl on her lap has trained her protege to the business, and now the latter occasionally turns the organ and bears the plate, while the woman is probably scheming to get a second organ and plate and set up business in another part of the city. At the present rate of increase the cities of Canada will soon swarm with beggars.

These people are non-producers. The statement that every immigrant is worth $1,000 to the country does not apply in their case. They are all a direct tax on the public, and they are so regarded by the law, and there is provision for their arrest as vagrants. They have no visible means of support. If the police would only enforce the law they would soon take wing. If they dread anything, it is imprisonment with hard labor. Only let an example be made of a few of them, and the rest will avoid the city when staring the country. There is no other excellent means of communi-

Less Vigorous than Their Fathers

A New Hampshire correspondent of the Manchester Mirror expresses his views on the deserted farm question thus bluntly: "If farms have run down, the people who occupy them are a long way ahead in the race. We have got on our farms to-day a class of people who can cipher through the algebra, play the piano, and boast of an acquaintance with the fine arts, but they can't work. They have got fine minds, but their bodies are sickly puny and weak. To talk the matter plainly, we have bred the bone and muscle out of our families until we have got a kind of human Jerseys, fine boned, mild eyed, and nice to look at and pet, and put on exhibition, but so tender and weak that they are fit neither for our climate, our work, nor our circumstances. Our fathers worked 12 to 14 hours a day and never thought of getting tired. We are used up when we have worked four hours. Our mothers made butter and cheese, fed the pigs and chickens, did the milking, raised a dozen children, made the clothing for the family, and when a shower was coming could rake or load hay. Our wives want a maid to tend the baby and another to do the house-work, a boy to do the chores, and if we keep more than one cow, a cheese factory to prevent the milk from spoiling. It is safe to say that 10 farmer's wives to-day cannot do as much hard work as would 160 50 years ago. As a farming people we are played out. If the young New Hampshire farmer who wants a

Only let an example be made of a few of them, and the rest will avoid the city when starring the country. They possess excellent means of communication among themselves, and are not slow to tell each other to beware of a town where their presence is objected to. If other places, especially the frontier towns, would join in the crusade against them the country would soon be rid of a nuisance. Those people who drop money into their cups should remember that they are the most to blame, as every cent thus given is a direct encouragement to vagrancy. These foreign beggars should be given to understand that America is not the El Dorado of their profession.

Cure for Burns.—Charcoal has a variety of uses. It is a cure for burns. By laying a small piece of cold charcoal on the burn the pain subsides immediately. By leaving the charcoal on for an hour the wound is healed, as has been demonstrated on several occasions.

Cabbage Worms.—A Perth man has found what he says is an effectual remedy for the ravages of the cabbage worm. It is simply to mix equal parts of good black pepper and mustard, and sprinkle on the heart of the cabbage with a pepper box.

On the farm of Mr. Daniel Maloney, Baie St. Paul, Manitoba, were planted last spring a few grains of Egyptian wheat. From each one of these grains there have grown on an average twenty-six stalks, which bore each one hundred and twenty-six grains.

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.
MR. T. J. B. HARDING,
Dear Sir,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 35 years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very acute back and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and constant labor, such as chopping and clearing land, which I have been engaged in the past season. My recovery I attribute solely with deep blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,

A VERY FUNNY STORY

MRS. BROWN AT THOMPSON HALL

Concluded.

Thompson Hall was an old brick with a gravel sweep before it. It stood there before Stratford was a too

in the hands of the present family fo more substantially built than most c modern villas. Mrs. Brown jum with alacrity from the carriage, and a quick step entered the home of forefathers. Her husband followed more leisurely; but he too felt tha was at home at Thompson Hall.

Mr. Jones walked in also; but he lo as though he were not at all at home was still very early, and no one of family was yet down. In these cir stances it was almost necessary that s thing should be said to Mr. Jones.

"Do you know Mr. Thompson?" a Mrs. Brown.

"I never had the pleasure of ac with a gravel sweep before it. It stood there before Stratford was a town, even a suburb, and had then been known by the name of Bow Place. But it had in the hands of the present family for last thirty years, and was now known and wide as Thompson Hall—a comfortable, roomy, old-fashioned place, perhaps a little dark and dull to look at, more substantially built than most modern villas. Mrs. Brown jumped with alacrity from the carriage, and a quick step entered the home of her forefathers. Her husband followed more leisurely; but he too felt that it was at home at Thompson Hall. Mr. Jones walked in also; but he looked as though he were not at all at home. It was still very early, and no one of the family was yet down. In these circumstances it was almost necessary that something should be said to Mr. Jones.

"Do you know Mr. Thompson?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"I never had the pleasure of seeing him—as yet," answered Mr. Jones, stiffly.

"Oh—I didn't know. Because I said you were coming here."

"And I have come here. Are you friends of Mr. Thompson?"

"Oh dear yes," said Mrs. Brown. "I was a Thompson myself before I married."

"Oh—Indeed!" said Mr. Jones. "That is very odd!—very odd indeed."

During this time the luggage was brought into the house, and two old female servants were offering them assistance. Would the new-comers like to go to their bedrooms? Then the housekeeper, Mrs. Green, intimated with a wink, that Miss Jane would, she was sure, be quite immediately. The lady probably had made her guess as to the mystery, but the two gentlemen were still altogether in the dark. Mrs. Brown had not declared her parentage, but Mr. Jones, with such a multitude of strange ideas crowding on his mind, had been slow to understand her. Being somewhat suspicious by nature, he was beginning to doubt whether possibly the mustard had been put by this lady on his throat with a reference to his connection with Thompson Hall. Could it be that she, for some reason of her own had wished to prevent his coming, and had contrived this toward stratagem out of her brain, had she wished to make him ridiculous to the Thompson family, to whom, if he was at present unknown, he was becoming more and more improbable to him that the whole thing should have been an accident. "THE GREATEST GOOD TO THE GREATEST NUMBER"

APANEE ONT., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14 1877.

The Coming Minister

A pastor wanted—one to please the people;
Our church, expensive and designed with skill,
Embellished with a mortgage and a Gothic steeple—
Has pulpit, pews and treasury to fill.
A modern Saupson kept in strength by practice,
A mental giant, to speak—we ask,
Who shall our burden lighten, for the fact is,
To lift a mortgage is no weak man's task.

A man to "draw"—an artist(like) plainer speaking—
Who frames with skill his soft-toned modern views,
To please the tastes of those who pleasure seek—
Rest for a little in our cushioned pews,
A Ho-man Hunt in style; not harsh like Turner;
With flame-hued tints and daubs of colors
garnish,
No dazzling lights; a softly-shaded burner
Best suits the sense of our aesthetic parish.

No clank of chains, no brimstone fumes for sinners,
No rugged pathway over hills uneven,
No weary race where but the few are winners.
The road is easier now-a-days to heaven;
For, from a depot planned by modern science,
We take our palaces or our sleeping-cars
To paradise direct—in calm, serene defiance
Of old time stages (with their jolts and jars).

Such must our pastor be—and such in brief, his preaching:
We'll read in Hegel, Fieuer, Renan and Strauss
He cannot fail to please, and if his teaching
A hint of Brahma or of Buddha show,
That's better still—men will not weary of it.
For doctrines new, whether of priest or sage,
Are indications of a coming prophet,
Fotelling for our church a golden age.

THOMPSON HALL.

A VERY FUNNY STORY.

BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

CHAPTER VI.

MRS. BROWN AT THOMPSON HALL.

Concluded.

Thompson Hall was an old brick mansion, standing within a large iron gate, with a gravel sweep before it. It had stood there before Stratford was a town, or even a suburb, and had then been known by the name of Bow Place. But it had been in the hands of the present family for the last thirty years, and was now known far and wide as Thompson Hall—a comfortable, roomy, old-fashioned place, perhaps a little dark and dull to look at, but more substantially built than most of our modern villas. Mrs. Brown jumped with alacrity from the carriage, and with a quick step entered the home of her forefathers. Her husband followed her more leisurely; but he too felt that he was at home at Thompson Hall. Then Mr. Jones walked in also; but he looked as though he were not at home. It was still very early, and no one of the family was yet down. In these circumstances it was at most necessary that something should be said to Mr. Jones.

"Do you know Mr. Thompson?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"I never had the pleasure of seeing him—as yet," answered Mr. Jones, very stiffly.

"Oh—I didn't know. Because you said you were coming here."

"And I have come here. Are you friends of Mr. Thompson?"

"Oh dear yes," said Mrs. Brown.

Brown's face, as though imploring her not to tell the story.

"Perhaps, Jane, you had better introduce us," said Mrs. Brown.

"Introduce you! I thought you had been travelling together, and staying at the same hotel, and all that."

"So we have; but people may be in the same hotel without knowing each other. And we have traveled all the way home with Mr. Jones without in the least knowing who he was."

"How very odd! Do you mean you have never spoken?"

"Not a word," said Mrs. Brown.

"I do so hope you'll love each other," said Jane.

"It shan't be my fault if we don't," said Mr. Brown.

"I'm sure it shan't be mine," said Mr. Brown, tendering his hand to the other gentleman. The various feelings of the moment were too much for Mr. Jones, and he could not respond quite as he should have done. But as he was taken up stairs to his room, he determined that he would make the best of it.

The owner of the house was old Uncle John. He was a bachelor, and with him lived various members of the family. There was the great Thompson of them all, Cousin Robert, who was now member of Parliament for the Essex Flats; and young John, as a certain enterprising Thompson of the age of 40 was usually called; and then there was old Aunt Bess; and among other young branches there was Miss Jane Thompson, who was now engaged to marry Mr. Charles Burnaby Jones. As it happened, no other member of the family had as yet seen Mr. Burnaby Jones, and he, being by nature of a retiring disposition, felt himself to be ill at ease when he came into the breakfast parlor among all the Thompsons. He was known to be a gentleman of good family and ample means, and all the Thompsons had approved of the match; but during the first Christmas breakfast he did not seem to accept his condition joyfully. His own Jane sat beside him, but then on the other side sat Mrs. Brown. She assumed an immediate intimacy—as women know how to do on such occasions—being determined from the very first to regard her sister's husband as a brother; but he still feared her. She was still to him the woman who had come to him in the dead of night with that horrid mixture—and had then left him.

"It was so odd that both of you should have been detained on the very same day," said Jane.

"Yes, it was odd," said Mrs. Brown, with a smile, looking round upon her neighbor.

"It was abominably bad weather, you know," said Brown.

"But you were both so determined to come," said the old gentleman. "When we got the two telegrams at the same moment, we were sure that there had been some agreement between you."

"Not exactly an agreement," said Mrs. Brown; whereupon Mr. Jones looked as grim as death.

"I'm sure there is something more than that he attempted to return the kiss. "And now I will tell the whole story," said Mrs. Brown. And she told it, acknowledging her fault with true contrition, and swearing that she would atone for it by life-long sisterly devotion.

"And you mustn't plastered the wrong man!" said the old gentleman, almost rolling off his chair with delight.

"I did," said Mrs. Brown, sobbing; "and I think no woman ever suffered as I suffered."

"And Jones wouldn't let you leave the hotel?"

"It was the handkerchief stopped us," said Brown.

"If it had turned out to be anybody else," said the member of Parliament "the results might have been most serious—not to say discreditably."

"That's nonsense, Robert," said Mrs. Brown, who was disposed to resent the use of so severe a word, even from the legislator cousin.

"In a strange gentleman's bedroom!" he continued. "It only shows that what I have always said is quite true. You should never go to bed in a strange house without locking your door."

Nevertheless it was a very jovial meeting, and before the evening was over, Mr. Jones was happy, and had been brought to acknowledge that the mustard plaster would probably not do him any permanent injury.

THE END.

The Origin of Steam Printing.

It is remarkable that the steam engine was not called to the aid of the printing press sooner than it was, but it had long been used in many of the industrial arts before it became a handmaid to "the art preservative of all arts." The first printing by steam was on the issue of the London Times for November 29, 1814. The improved hand-presses of that day could strike off only from two to three hundred impressions an hour with one man to ink the types and another to work the press. At that rate a very large edition of a daily paper was simply impossible, for one day's work could not be completed before the next day's must begin. The Times then printed from three to four thousand copies daily, and Mr. John Walter, the proprietor (the second of that name), began as early as 1804 to consider whether the work might not be expedited in some way.

In that year Thomas Martyn, a compositor in the Times office, got up a model of a self-acting machine for working the press, and Walter furnished money for the continuance of his experiments. As usual in the early history of labor-saving machinery, this attempt met with bitter opposition from the workmen, who supposed their craft was in danger. Martyn was in fear of his life because of the threats of the pressmen, and partly on that account, and partly because Walter had small capital at that time, the scheme was given up. As soon, however, as König's printing machine was invented in 1814 Walter

... standing within a huge iron gate, with a gravel sweep before it. It had stood there before Stratford was a town, or even a suburb, and had then been known by the name of Bow Place. Mrs. Brown jumped with alacrity from the carriage, and with a quick step entered the home of her forefathers. Her husband followed her more leisurely; but he too felt that he was at home in Thompson Hall. Then Mr. Jones walked in also; but he looked as though he were not at all at home. It was still very early, and no one of the family was yet down. In these circumstances it was almost necessary that something should be said to Mr. Jones.

"Do you know Mr. Thompson?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"I never had the pleasure of seeing him—as yet," answered Mr. Jones very stiffly.

"Oh—I didn't know. Because you said you were coming here."

"And I have come here. Are you friends of Mr. Thompson?"

"Oh—Indeed!" said Mr. Jones. "How very odd!—very odd indeed."

During this time the luggage was being brought into the house, and two old family servants were offering them assistance. Would the new-comers like to go up to their bedrooms? Then the housekeeper, Mrs. Green, intimated with a wink, that Miss Jane would, she was sure, be down quite immediately. The lady probably had made her guess as to the mystery, but the two gentlemen were still altogether in the dark. Mrs. Brown had no doubt declared her parentage, but Mr. Jones with such a multitude of strange facts crowding on his mind, had been slow to understand her. Being somewhat suspicious by nature, he was beginning to think whether possibly the mustard had been put by this lady on his throat with some reference to his connection with Thompson Hall. Could it be that she, for some reason of her own had wished to prevent his coming, and had contrived this untoward stratagem out of her brain? or had she wished to make him ridiculous to the Thompson family, to whom, as a family, he was at present unknown? It was becoming more and more improbable to him that the whole thing should have been an accident. When, after the first horrid torments of that morning in which he had in his agony brooded the fast parlor among all the Thompsons. He was known to be a gentleman of good family and ample means, and all the Thompsons had approved of the match; but during the first Christmas breakfast he did not seem to accept his condition jovially. His own Jane sat beside him, but then on the other side sat Mrs. Brown. She assumed an immediate intimacy—as women know how to do on such occasions—being determined from the very first to regard her sister's husband as a brother; but he still feared her. She was still to him the woman who had come to him in the dead of night with that horrid mixture—and had then left him.

"It was so odd that both of you should have been detained on the very same day," said Jane.

"Yes, it was odd," said Mrs. Brown, with a smile, looking round upon her neighbor.

"It was abominably bad weather, you know," said Brown.

"But you were both so determined to come," said the old gentleman. "When we got the two telegrams at the same moment, we were sure that there had been some agreement between you."

"Not exactly an agreement," said Mrs. Brown; whereupon Mr. Jones looked as grim as death.

"I'm sure there is something more than we understand yet," said the member of Parliament.

Then they all went to church, as a united family ought to do on Christmas day, and came home to a fine old English early dinner at three o'clock—a sirloin of beef a foot and a half broad, a turkey as big as an ostrich, a plum-pudding bigger than the turkey, and two or three dozen mince-pies. "That's a very large bit of beef," said Mr. Jones, who had not lived much in England latterly.

"It won't look so large," said the old gentleman, "when all our friends down stairs have had their say to it." "A plum-pudding on Christmas-day can't be too big," he said again, "if the cook will but take time enough over it. I never knew a bit go to waste yet."

By this time there had been some explanation as to past events between the two sisters. Mrs. Brown had, indeed, told Jane all about it—how ill her husband had been, how she had been forced to go down and look for the mustard, and then what she had done with the mustard.

"I don't think they are a bit alike, you know, Mary, if you mean that," said Jane.

"Well, no; perhaps not quite alike. I only saw his beard, you know. No doubt it was stupid, but I did it."

"Why didn't you take it off again?" asked the sister.

"Oh, Jane, if you only think of it? Could you?" Then, of course, all that occurred was explained—how they had been stopped on their journey, how Brown had made the best apology in his power, and how Jones had travelled with them and had never spoken a word. The gentleman had only taken his new name a week since, but of course had his new card printed immediately. "I am sure I should have thought of it, if they hadn't made a mistake of the first name. Charles said it was like Barnaby Rudge."

"Not at all like Barnaby Rudge," said Jane; "Charles Barnaby Jones is a very good name."

"Very good indeed—and I'm sure that after a little bit he won't be at all the worse for the accident."

Before dinner the secret had been told no further, but still there had crept about among the Thompsons, and, indeed, down stairs also among the retainers, a feeling that there was a secret. The old housekeeper was sure that Miss Mary, as she still called Mrs. Brown, had something to tell, if she could only be induced to tell it, and that this something had reference to Mr. Jones' personal comfort. The head of the family, who was a sharp old gentleman, felt this also, and the member of Parliament, who had an idea that he especially should never be kept in the dark, was almost angry. Mr. Jones, suffering from some kindred feeling throughout the dinner, remained silent and un-

As soon, however, as König's printing machine was invented in 1814, Walter consented that it should be tried on the Times; but for fear of the workmen the experiment was made, not in the regular printing office of the paper, but in an adjoining building. Here König and his assistant, Bauer, worked secretly for several months, testing and perfecting the machine. On the 20th of November everything was ready for actual work on the paper, and the result is told in a biographical sketch of Mr. Walter, which appeared in the Times in July, 1847:

"The night on which the curious machine was first brought into use in its new abode was one of great anxiety and even alarm. The suspicious pressmen had threatened destruction to any one whose invention might suspend their employment—'destruction to him and his traps.' They were directed to wait for expected news from the Continent. It was about six o'clock in the morning when Mr. Walter went into the press-room and astonished its occupants by telling them that the Times was already printed by steam, and if they attempted violence there was force ready to suppress it; but that if they were peaceable their wages should be continued to every one of them till similar employment could be procured. The promise was, no doubt, faithfully performed; and having so said, he distributed several copies among them. Thus, was the most hazardous enterprise undertaken and successfully carried through, and printing by steam, on a most gigantic scale, given to the world."

The Dirtiness of War.

A Danube correspondent says that one of his hopes that all war will end soon is that as people become more civilized the dirtiness of it will become more unendurable.

What characterizes an army in the field above everything else is dirt. One is clothed in it, one eats it, drinks it, smells it. Officers who once were doubtless brilliant as butterflies in uniform, spotless as the lily of the field, become dragged, stained and rusty. Their coats have holes, their boots are patched. When two or three toasts had been drunk—the Queen's health, the old gentleman's health, the young couple's health, Brown's health, and the general health of all the Thompsons—then tongues were loosened and a question was asked. "I know that there has been something doing in Paris between these young people that we have not heard as yet," said the uncle. Then Mrs. Brown laughed, and Jane, laughing too, gave Mr. Jones to understand that he, at any rate, knew all about it.

"If there is a mystery, I hope it will be told at once," said the member of Parliament, angrily.

"Come Brown, what is it?" asked another male cousin.

"Well, there was an accident. I'd rather Jones should tell," said he.

Jones's brow became blaker than thunder, but he did not say a word. "You mustn't be angry with Mary," Jane whispered into her lover's ear.

"Come, Mary, you never were slow at talking," said the uncle.

"I do hate this kind of thing," said the member of Parliament.

"I will tell it all," said Mrs. Brown, very nearly in tears, or else pretending to be very nearly in tears. "I know I was very wrong, and I do beg his pardon; and if he won't say that he forgives me, I never shall be happy again." Then she clasped her hands, and turning round, looked him piteously in the face.

"Oh, yes; I do forgive you," said Mr. Jones.

"My brother," said she, throwing her arms round him and kissing him. He recoiled from the embrace, but I think

The Dirtiness of War.

A Danube correspondent says that one of his hopes that all war will end soon is that as people become more civilized the dirtiness of it will become more unendurable.

What characterizes an army in the field above everything else is dirt. One is clothed in it, one eats it, drinks it, smells it. Officers who once were doubtless brilliant as butterflies in uniform, spotless as the lily of the field, become draggled, stained and rusty. Their coats have holes, their boots are patched. As for some further details of the sort which I must not dwell on, a hint should suffice—everybody cuts his hair as short as scissors will do it before entering on a campaign.

A moment arrives, after no long time, when soldiers' servants give up washing in despair, and accept all the dirt that comes to them. Then they cease to observe whether their masters' things are clean or no, despite the humble duty of washing cups and plates and forks, ignore the use of soap, and all that civilization has laboriously impressed upon the menial instinct. They return to the customs of primeval man, and we follow of necessity. Thus forks and spoons are ignored at an early stage, plates and dishes somewhat later. At this very moment, a grimy wretch, upon whose hand one might plant mustard seed with reasonable hope, is employed besides me in cutting sugar. He has brought forth a snowy lump and a butcher's knife, and upon the bare earth he is hacking off chips. These he collects and ranges in a greased tin box, popping each alternate lump into the black cavern of his mouth. All is done with the foul fingers, upon the native soil, between whiffs of tobacco; and no one protests; the greater number do not even observe such things now. We are all so conscious of dirt, so resigned and hopeless about it, that a little more or less is not worth disputing. I shall not linger upon this theme. Let your readers turn up the passage of "London Labor and London Poor," in which the dens of St. Giles are described, and the way of life in that quarter. The manners and customs pictured there are not so filthy as those we necessarily adopt. This army is but little worse than others. War itself is foul. There are more wounded die of dirt than of lead or iron.

The Japanese Government has built a war balloon which is to be sent to the southern army now operating against the rebels.

A numerous signed petition has been presented to the mayor of San Antonio, Texas, begging permission to have bull-fights in the city.

From the eyes of the woman I love."

What a Soldier Gets to Eat.

Turning to the British soldiers, we find in him the most daintily fed of all warriors, unless it was the Serbian in last year's war. If we are to believe special correspondents, the rations of the Serbian soldier were almost unlimited, and furnished a striking contrast to the fare of the frugal Turks. An oka, or two and one-half pounds of brown bread, half an oka of fresh meat, together with a modicum of rice, meal and paprika, was the daily ration, the last-named comestible being employed for making soup; the pot-au-feu, so we are assured, was to be found simmering in camp from early morn till noon, and then came off only to make room for the coffee kettle. The Serbian soldiery, too, usually had a ration of spirits called slivovitz, or plum brandy, allowed them, and yet withal they had no such powers of endurance as the maize-fed Turks. In this country a soldier's ration is three-quarters of a pound of meat and one pound of bread, which is supplemented in war time to a quarter of a pound of cheese, together with cocoa or tea, sugar, &c. In the Crimea there was a standing order that hot tea should always be kept ready when practicable, so that the men might partake of it at any time, and in the Abyssinian and Ashantee campaigns the camps were never broken up of a morning before the troops had been supplied with a cup of warm coffee for breakfast. Tea and coffee exercise the same effect upon the system as wine and spirits, but their stimulative action is less marked, and our commanding officers are enjoined never to issue a ration of spirits except under extraordinary circumstances, as in the cases of distressing marches or when troops are engaged in the trenches or up at the front. And yet as we have said, with this apparently liberal feeding our men do not receive so much actual nourishment or nitrogenous matter as the German soldier, whose mainstay is the two-pound loaf of black bread he receives daily. The meat, bread, sugar, &c., received by British soldier in the Crimea, yielded, as we are told by the Royal Commissioners, but 28.52 ounces of nutritive principle, while Germany gives her soldiers 32.96 ounces, which is still further increased when the latter are fed on such highly nitrogenous diet as the pen-sausage. The Turks, poor as their food may seem to us (it being bread almost alone), probably derive as much nutriment from it as English troops from their bread, meat and cocoa; for, weight for weight, the Turkish rations contain more nitrogenous matter. If, too, their meal is what is termed "whole flour," it will, since it includes the husk, contain more nitrogen still, and, like oatmeal, be one of the most generous foods known. Scotch troops, we fancy, would be little the worse if fed solely on porridge for a time. The reader may remember Lord Elbanc's retort on Dr. Johnston's definition of oats as the food of horses in England and men in Scotland: "Yes," said he, "and where else will you find such horses and such men?" A growing soldier, hard at work all day at gun-drill or other laborious work, does not buy extra meat when he is hungry, but foregoes his beer at the canteen for another pound loaf thus approaching his diet very nearly to that of the German warrior, who, we have shown, lives almost entirely on bread and enjoys the most nutritive fare. At the same time it is necessary to bear in mind that the conditions under which a man lives must guide the nature of his food. English Business Women.

Not only in politics but in business, women appear much more prominently than they do in "America." If they do keep hotels, which they sometimes do, they manage them, whether they are great or small. The place which in "America" is filled by that exquisite, awful and impeturable being, the hotel clerk, is filled invariably in England by a woman—so at least I always found the change a very happy one. To meet by the cheery, pleasant faces of these bright, well-mannered women, to be spoken to as if you were a human being whom in consideration of what you are to pay, it was a pleasure to make as comfortable as possible, instead of being treated with lofty condescension, or at best with serene indifference, was a pleasant sensation. And these women did their work so quiet and cheerfully, and yet in such a businesslike way, that it was a constant pleasure to come in contact with them. Dressed in black serge or alpaca, they affected no flirting airs, directed or obeyed promptly and quietly. And yet their womanhood was constantly in their manner and in their thoughtfulness for the comfort of those who were in their care. They always had a pleasant word or smile in answer to a passing remark, were always ready to answer any question or give any information, and were pleased at any acknowledgment of satisfaction. Naturally it was so; for they were women; and they were chosen, it seemed to me, for their pleasant ways as well as for their efficiency. From not one of them, from one end of England to the other, in great cities or in quiet country towns and villages, did I receive one surly word or look, or anything but the kindest and promptest attention. I can say the same of the shop women, who waited upon customers not as if they were consciously condescending in the performances of such duties, but cheerfully and pleasantly and with a show of interest that a purchaser should be satisfied. Their dress was almost invariably the same black unadorned serge or alpaca, which, by the way, is the commonest street dress of all women of their condition. In the telegraph offices the clerks are generally women; and indeed, women seem to do everything except plough, drive omnibuses and railway engines, and be soldiers and policemen. They keep turnpikes, where turnpikes still exist; and in Sussex I saw a woman's name with her husband's upon the pike-house. Indeed, it seemed to me that in all public affairs from politics down to turnpike-keeping, women were very much more engaged and before the world in England than in America.—[R. G. White, in Galaxy.

This is the great Turkish cemetery of Scutari. It is said that the entire population of Constantinople does not exceed a twentieth part of the dead that sleep under those cypresses. that he attempted to return the kiss. "And now I will tell the whole story," said Mrs. Brown. And she told it, acknowledging her fault with true contrition, and swearing that she would atone for it by life-long sisterly devotion. "And you mustard-plastered the wrong man!" said the old gentleman, almost rolling off his chair with delight. "I did," said Mrs. Brown, sobbing; "and I think no woman ever suffered as I suffered." And Jones wouldn't let you leave the hotel?" "It was the handkerchief stopped us," said Brown. "If it had turned out to be anybody else," said the member of Parliament "the results might have been most serious—not to say discreditable." "That's nonsense, Robert," said Mrs. Brown, who was disposed to resent the use of so severe a word, even from the legislator cousin. "In a strange gentleman's bedroom!" he continued. "It only shows that what I have always said is quite true. You should never go to bed in a strange house without locking your door." Nevertheless it was a very jovial meeting, and before the evening was over, Mr. Jones was happy, and had been brought to acknowledge that the mustard plaster would probably not do him any permanent injury.

THE END,

The Origin of Steam Printing.

It is remarkable that the steam engine was not called to the aid of the printing press sooner than it was, but it had long been used in many of the industrial arts before it became a handmaid to "the art preservative of all arts." The first printing by steam was on the issue of the London Times for November 29, 1814. The improved hand-presses of that day could strike off only from two to three hundred impressions an hour with one man to ink the types and another to work the press. At that rate a very large edition of a daily paper was simply impossible, for one day's work could not be completed before the next day's must begin. The Times then printed from three to four thousand copies daily, and Mr. John Walter, the proprietor (the second of that name), began as early as 1804 to consider whether the work might not be expedited in some way.

In that year Thomas Martyn, a compositor in the Times office, got up a model of a self-acting machine for working the press, and Walter furnished money for the continuance of his experiments. As usual in the early history of labor-saving machinery, this attempt met with bitter opposition from the workmen, who supposed their craft was in danger. Martyn was in fear of his life because of the threats of the pressmen, and partly on that account, and partly because Walter had small capital at that time, the scheme was given up. As soon, however, as König's printing machine was invented in 1814, Walter consented that it should be tried on the Times; but for fear of the workmen the experiment was made, not in the regular printing office of the paper, but in an adjoining building. Here König and his as-

s face, as though imploring her not to tell the story. "Chaps, Jane, you had better introduce you! I thought you had avell together, and staying at a hotel, and all that." "We have; but people may be in the hotel without knowing each other. And we have traveled all the way with Mr. Jones without in the least who he was." "How very odd! Do you mean you never spoken?" "I don't know," said Mrs. Brown. "I hope you'll love each other," said Mrs. Brown. "I'm sure it shan't be mine," said Mr. Jones, tendering his hand to the other. The various feelings of the two were to much for Mr. Jones, and he did not respond quite as he should. But as he was taken up stairs to bed, he determined that he would be the best of it. The owner of the house was old Uncle Jones. He was a bachelor, and with him the various members of the family, was the great Thompson of them. Mr. Robert, who was now member of the House of Commons, and John, as a certain enterprising son of the age of 40 was usually called, and then there was old Aunt and among other young branches as Miss Jane Thompson, who was gaged to marry Mr. Charles Burrows. As it happened, no other of the family had as yet seen Mr. Jones, and he, being by nature of a cheerful disposition, felt himself to be as when he came into the breakfast room among all the Thompsons. He was a gentleman of good and ample means, and all the sons had approved of the match; and the first Christmas breakfast did not seem to accept his condition. His own Jane sat beside him, and on the other side sat Mrs. Brown. They had an immediate intimacy—as is known how to do on such occasions—determined from the very first by her sister's husband as a brother; still feared her. She was still to woman who had come to him in the night with that horrid mixture and then left him. "How very odd that both of you should be detained on the very same day," said Mrs. Brown. "It was odd," said Mrs. Brown. "I smile, looking round upon her." "It was abominably bad weather," you said Brown. "You were both so determined to said the old gentleman. "When the two telegrams at the same time, we were sure that there had been an agreement between you." "Exactly an agreement," said Mrs. Brown; whereupon Mr. Jones looked as death. "There is something more than I understand yet," said the member of Parliament. "They all went to church, as a family ought to do on Christmas day," said Mrs. Brown. "I came home to a friend. I had

Here König and his assistant, Bauer, worked secretly for several months, testing and perfecting the machine. On the 20th of November everything was ready for actual work on the paper, and the result is thus told in a biographical sketch of Mr. Walter, which appeared in the Times in July, 1847:

"The night on which the curious machine was first brought into use in its new abode was one of great anxiety and even alarm. The suspicious pressmen had threatened destruction to any one whose invention might suspend their employment—destruction to him and his traps. They were directed to wait for expected news from the Continent. It was about six o'clock in the morning when Mr. Walter went into the press-room and astonished its occupants by telling them that the Times was already printed by steam, and if they attempted violence there was force ready to suppress it; but that if they were peaceable their wages should be continued to every one of them till similar employment could be procured. The promise was, no doubt, faithfully performed; and having so said, he distributed several copies among them. Thus, was the most hazardous enterprise undertaken and successfully carried through, and printing by steam, on a most gigantic scale, given to the world."

The Dirtiness of War.

A Danube correspondent says that one of his hopes that all war will end soon is that as people become more civilized the dirtiness of it will become more unendurable.

What characterizes an army in the field above everything else is dirt. One is clothed in it, one eats it, drinks it, smells it. Officers who once were doubtless brilliant as butterflies in uniform, spotted as the lily of the field, become draggled, stained and rusty. Their coats have holes, their boots are patched. As for the soldiers, they are simply filthy. You will meet them more ragged than the poorest laborers, and those who were once snowy white of vesture have fallen to the lowest depths of darkness. As for some further details of the sort which I must not dwell on, a hint should suffice—everybody cuts his hair as short as scissors will do it before entering on a campaign.

men do not receive so much actual nourishment or nitrogenous matter as the German soldier, whose mainstay is the two-pound loaf of black bread he receives daily. The meat, bread, sugar, &c., received by British soldier in the Crimea, yielded, as we are told by the Royal Commissioners, but 28.52 ounces of nutritive principle, while Germany gives her soldiers 32.96 ounces, which is still further increased when the latter are fed on such highly nitrogenous diet as the pea-sausage. The Turks, poor as their food may seem to us (it being bread almost alone), probably derive as much nutriment from it as English troops from their bread, meat and cocoa; for, weight for weight, the Turkish rations contain more nitrogenous matter. If, too, their meal is what is termed "whole flour," it will, since it includes the husk, contain more nitrogen still, and, like oatmeal, be one of the most generous foods known. At the same time it is necessary to bear in mind that the conditions under which a man lives must guide the nature of his food. A man inhabiting a cold climate such as ours requires more animal food than he would if he lived in a country nearer the equator, and British troops, we fear, would lose much of their energy if fed altogether on farinaceous food. But, as we have striven to show, it is not always a so-called liberal diet which affords the soldier the greatest quantity of nutriment.—Nature.

Flirtations.

"June," writing to the New York Herald says: "Please allow me a small space in your 'Complaint Book' about ladies and gentlemen—married ones, particularly—in regard to the flirtations carried on between the sexes. Whenever a woman appears in public and flirts she is not only the cause of her name being lightly spoken of, but her innocent sisters must suffer and become in a degree tainted. Light things are said about her. What right has a woman to rob a pure-minded and virtuous girl's character? You say none at all. Still, by flirting, does she not place her sister's name in jeopardy? Flirting is an evil that should be shunned by our older ones. How many young girls take the malady from some married woman. A married woman flirts more than a single one, as she has a shield—husband. Is it a wonder that men speak lightly and insult women when they do nothing to prevent these evils? Men are ruined by women. I have seen married women gaze at men in a kiss-me-if-you-dare style that honest men must blush at their want of respect. Now, such women debase both sexes; for, if wives are what God desires them to be, men will have respect for them; but until women are true themselves, they cannot expect men to be. A woman is a guide for man to go by, his compass; but, if his compass is out of order, man will drift away and perhaps never find his proper course again. So women, beware how many lives you wreck! I hope what ever lady reads this will pause and think of what good she can do and show the false ones that honor and respect are due to a 'woman' only—not a flirt."

The case of Mrs. Angeline Smith of Mariboro', Mass. is an interesting one for surgeons. In 1874 her nephew assaulted her with an axe, crushed in her skull and terribly lacerating her scalp. Her death was deemed certain, but she is still alive. The scalp wound was drawn together by ligatures over the broken skull, but it did

A moment arrives, after no long time, when soldiers' servants give up washing in despair, and accept all the dirt that comes to them. Then they cease to observe whether their masters' things are clean or no, despise the humble duty of washing cups and plates and forks, ignore the use of soap, and all that civilization has laboriously impressed upon the mental instinct. They return to the customs of primeval man, and we follow of necessity. These forks and spoons are ignored at an early stage, plates and dishes somewhat later. At this very moment, a grimy wretch, upon whose hand one might plant mustard seed with reasonable hope, is employed besides me in cutting sugar. He has brought forth a snowy lump and a butcher's knife, and upon the bare earth he is hacking off chips. These he collects and ranges in a greased tin box, popping each alternate lump into the black cavern of his mouth. All is done with the foul fingers, upon the native soil, between whiffs of tobacco; and no one protests; the greater number do not even observe such things now. We are all so conscious of dirt, so resigned and hopeless about it, that a little more or less is not worth disputing. I shall not linger upon this theme. Let your readers turn up the passage of "London Labor and London Poor," in which the den of St. Giles are described, and the way of life in that quarter. The manners and customs pictured there are not so filthy as those we necessarily adopt. This army is but little worse than others. War itself is foul. There are more wounded die of dirt than of lead or iron.

Vague rumours of lands where slavery was unknown came to him. Glimpses of a strange knowledge, communicable by means of written and printed characters, gleamed before him. He resolved to learn to read and write. He vowed that he would flee to that far-off land of freedom. Secretly, for it was forbidden, he taught himself reading and writing. There is nowhere a more pathetic chapter of personal biography than that in which the painful and furtive studies of the poor slave boy are described. In 1838, when twenty-one years old Douglass carried out his long-cherished plan of escape. He fled to New York, and, after divers vicissitudes, made his way to Massachusetts. There he married, and when in 1840 the long stifled anti-slavery feeling of New England burst out, he astonished everybody with his sudden appearance as a living example of the wrongs of human slavery. His addresses gave him notoriety, and he was immediately "wanted" in Maryland. He was safe nowhere in the American Republic so long as his chattelhood was recognized by a majority of the people of the United States. His owner demanded his body to be returned to slavery. But his romantic career, his commanding talents, and his recognized services in the cause of emancipation had given him some fame. A subscription was opened in England, and in 1864 Frederick Douglass was bought, paid for, and delivered to himself by sundry British "sentimentalists," as they were then esteemed. How he was hated and feared by the slave-holding politicians, and how he found it necessary to flee to England after John Brown's failure at Harper's Ferry, most of our readers know.

Flirtations.

"June," writing to the New York Herald says: "Please allow me a small space in your 'Complaint Book' about ladies and gentlemen—married ones, particularly—in regard to the flirtations carried on between the sexes. Whenever a woman appears in public and flirts she is not only the cause of her name being lightly spoken of, but her innocent sisters must suffer and become in a degree tainted. Light things are said about her. What right has a woman to rob a pure-minded and virtuous girl's character? You say none at all. Still, by flirting, does she not place her sister's name in jeopardy? Flirting is an evil that should be shunned by our older ones. How many young girls take the malady from some married woman. A married woman flirts more than a single one, as she has a shield—husband. Is it a wonder that men speak lightly and insult women when they do nothing to prevent these evils? Men are ruined by women. I have seen married women gaze at men in a kiss me-if-you-dare style that honest men must blush at their want of respect. Now, such women debase both sexes; for, if wives are what God desires them to be, men will have respect for them; but until women are true themselves, they cannot expect men to be. A woman is a guide for man to go by, his compass; but, if his compass is out of order, man will drift away and perhaps never find his proper course again. So women, beware how many lives you wreck! I hope what ever lady reads this will pause and think of what good she can do and show the false ones that honor and respect are due to a 'woman' only—not a flirt."

The case of Mrs. Angelina Smith of Marlboro', Mass.: is an interesting one for surgeons. In 1874 her nephew assaulted her with an axe, crushed in her skull and terribly lacerating her scalp. Her death was deemed certain, but she is still alive. The scalp wound was drawn together by ligatures over the broken skull, but it did not heal. Pieces of exfoliated bone which had been shattered by the blows were constantly working out, leaving the brain exposed so that its pulsation could be plainly seen, and there was a constant suppuration directly on the brain which it was supposed must produce death within a very short time. To-day, however Mrs. Smith is as hearty, robust, and able-bodied a woman in appearance as any in the town. Still she has a gaping wound on her head. The exfoliation of bones goes on continually, and the suppuration never ceases; but this does not prevent her from keeping house, doing her own work, and getting time to do a pretty good business at her trade of sewing bonnets.

Perhaps the most remarkable suicide on record has been committed in Sweden. A Government official in the district of Rippsa, wearied by pecuniary difficulties, took a row with his wife and two children upon a neighboring lake, ostensibly to pass a few hours in fishing, but after getting to a distance at which he could do no harm to others, he applied a match to a quantity of explosive material, supposed to be some form of dynamite, that he had unobserved, taken with him, and blew the boat and its occupants literally into fragments.

A Dutch seaman, being condemned to death, had his sentence commuted to banishment for life upon St. Helena. On being landed there he stole a coffin, and, having made a rudder of the lid, ventured to sea in it. When his guards on the ship, which had become becalmed within a league and a half of the Island, saw the strange craft floating slowly over the water, they at first imagined a spectre, but, on recognizing the fugitive, they decided to show mercy to the courageous fellow. He was picked up, taken to Holland and supported by the crew until pardoned through the intercession of the late Queen.

servative Association, the objects were the same, the proceedings were the same, and at the same time, members of the County Council, had no hesitation whatever in calling it a meeting of the Association and urging recruits to attend. Indeed one of the Reeves then declined to do so, on the ground that it was unbecoming at such a time, for a County Councillor to attend such a meeting.

It may be, it is quite in keeping with the tactics of the party that the meetings then held are not mentioned in the "records," but the ugly fact exists that the meeting was held under the circumstances we have mentioned, and no sort of pretence shall avail this scribbler in denying what is in truth, undeniable, and what he very well knows to be true, so much then for this childlike and bland boast that "there is no reason why the most open confidence should not be practical on our side." In the face of the facts we have stated and can substantiate with names and places he has the hardihood to say "the charge is false." Probably the day is not far distant when the organ of our local Liberal Conservative Association will realize that "honesty is the best policy" and that reckless statements come home with a vengeance to roost and depart not thence forever.

Our allegations respecting the wretched and contemptible trick of exacting a written pledge from the Electors as to what candidate they will support, he neither attempts to pelliate nor deny. He cannot even muster temerity enough. In the face of so many witnesses to the fact, to say, as in the former case with the recklessness of despair "the charge is false." He dare not do it, and the consciousness of his exposed and indefensible position drives him clean mad with rage, and he maunders on in this helpless way; then the writer proceeds to charge that some persons are compelling the

"Electors to stultify themselves. What nonsense! Does the penny-a-liner imagine that the Opposition are fools that they should be led by the noses even as Mr. CARTWRIGHT leads him? If he does we can assure him it is high time to awake. The electors know that they can cast their ballot for whom they will without fear of detection. The momentary leaders know this also, and time will prove that the candidate representing the Opposition will be a popularly selected man, not a self-foisted autocrat. But mark the ease with which stultification comes to him. Stand him before the bar of the public, and let him answer. Did Mr. CARTWRIGHT ever, systematically, buy his way into Parliament at from $4 upwards per vote, and thus stultify enough electors to elect him? Did Mr. CARTWRIGHT ever deal out whiskey by the barrel to stultify and corrupt the morals of electors, and win an election?"

This is midsummer madness, and is about as comical a non-sequitur as we have met with in many a long day.

The charge was specific, it is not and cannot be denied, but as a reply, this Liberal Conservative Association Champion strikes wildly at a man of straw, the creature of his own disturbed imagination, whom, in his fury, he mistakes for the Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, and delivers himself of the above nonsensical tirade. We will for a moment treat seriously what no one can at first blush, help treating as a bit of silly twaddle, and we say that even if all the charges which he has sought to level at the Hon. the "Minister of Finance were true, they are no answer whatever to the very serious and very truthful charges to which they purport to be a reply.

But although we might, we stop not here, we say and we defy successful contradiction that to each and every of

A Decided Denial.

To the Editor of THE BRAVER.

DEAR SIR.—Will you allow me space sufficient to deny the assertions made by the Express of last week, in the article headed "Packing the Jury," impugning the integrity of the county council. The charges are false and altogether without foundation, and merit only contempt.

Yours truly,
W. N. DOLLAR, Warden.

NAPANEE, Sept. 5th, 1877.

Let us examine the facts. We stated in the article of which he complains, that a Liberal Conservative Association had been formed. Such an Association has been formed and neither he nor the Standard can deny it, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR." We said "meetings had been held with this object in view." The Standard says, meetings were held on the 24th May, 8th June, 21st July, 11th and 25th August, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR." We said "the gatherings for Municipal purposes have been utilized in the same way," we have already shown that the June session of the County Council was utilized by certain Members of the Council, by holding a meeting or meetings for party political purposes, we repeat the statement and challenge contradiction of the fact, but the Warden says "the charges are false, AND ALTOGETHER WITHOUT FOUNDATION."

We said "their organ vulgarly boasted that the Association had for its President the Warden of the County." The Warden is the President, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We said "The really thoughtful men of both parties have been struggling for some years past to banish the baneful spirit of party from Municipal affairs." The really thoughtful men have been so striving—a fact so well known, that it goes without saying, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We said "a certain trio of the faithful few have been making peripatetic journeys to each school section for the purpose of establishing branches of the concern." * * * "the worthies have the cheek and the hardihood to ask Electors to sign a cast iron pledge to vote for the Candidate nominally selected by the Association but really to be selected by a knot of wire pullers in Toronto called the United Empire Club."

The Standard does not attempt to deny these statements but uses the stale device of saying "you'r another," and so thinks to find shelter by saying Mr. CARTWRIGHT did bad things at his elections.

The trio did peregrinate the County, did present the cast iron pledge, and establish their branches just as we said, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We pause, for want of space, not for want of opportunity to show how reckless and unfortunate His Honor the Warden has been in gratifying his vanity by attempting to use his official character in the public prints to stamp us with falsehood. He undoubtedly thought that the contempt which he so cordially invoked for us would follow his behest.

We do not feel at all sat upon. We do not even experience a trace of contempt. We think we shall survive. We have so turned the tables upon His Honor the Warden that we are confident the public foolscap, upon which were pasted carefully selected extracts from Wright's Newmarket speech, from the Express of last Friday which were used to refresh his while he made strenuous and unsuccessful efforts to convince his listeners of the falsity of their statements. Many important points, in the question, were not even alluded to. The Doctor should have heard expressions of dissatisfaction from servative backers, who had care the article from which his text was taken and who expected he would have up the speech verbatim and re facts and figures in a fair and like manner, instead of jumping warrantable conclusions, which served to whet the appetite of his for a more careful review of Wright's statements, which have more attention from staunch opponents in this section, both before and demonstration, than the leader Opposition have any idea of.

Dr. Tupper was followed by White jr., of Montreal, Mr. T. of Oshawa, and Mr. Wm. McEl Toronto, each of whom followed Doctors' footsteps, and although gave an abundant flow of oratory presented a small amount of fact may say, their, in some instances harangues, fell far short of the mark, and were mainly towards disparaging the present situation, and the financial management of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright.

SIR JOHN'S CLOSING FAREWELL.

As Mr. McDougall concluded to see the Master of Ceremonies Great Sir John, was plainly manifest the expectant looks of the score seated in front of the "Grand many of whom had come from to see the show and the Hero a sight of whom seemed to be a pal attraction. (John A., meantime inspecting the appliances like any well-regulated show doing a little private haul throughout the grounds.) struck up "See the Warden comes." He came—to the smiling like a sunbeam, the returned with interest by his lady admirers, as Sir John kept the music, while the ladies sized his faultless "get up," his locks and jaunty air. The music the Chieftain delivered himself of his stereotyped speeches with grace, addressing himself primarily to the ladies which was duly acknowledged by the waving of delicate cambric of smiles, enough to intimidate imperturbable statesmen in but the invincible John A., (man of the troupe) being used things, was in no wise disturbed the trying ordeal with nimity of a Dan Rice, or a Jack He finally wound up by a usual state jokes and quoting Hamlet amid the mirth and delight of the—who thought Sir John had been a success as a showman, statesman he was a dead failure great many expressed themselves ingly.

THE EXPRESS.

[NAPANEE, SEPT. 7th, 1877.]

"PACKING THE JURY."

As promised last week we now proceed to quote the language of the writer of the Standard's escapade of the 6th inst., to "stand him before the bar of the public and let him answer."

He begins with a thundering onslaught of big words, calling our own modest efforts "outrageous, wholly unjustifiable and totally unprovoked" and then for want of breath, we suppose to call us names, subsides into speaking of his own party, in this kind of fashion; "there is no reason why the most open confidence should not be practical on our side." Certainly not, The Babes in the Wood, were adepts in craft, and full of guile, compared with the innocence and open confidence of the Lambs on "our side," the members of the Liberal Conservative Association. He proceeds to say "The first charge made is that the meetings of the County Council have been utilized for the purpose of furthering the political interests of the Opposition party in the County. The charge is false." Then as proofs of the falsity of the alleged charge, he gives the dates of the meetings of the Liberal Conservative Association showing that the first organization meeting of the Association was held before, and other meetings were held after the June Session of the County Council, and then in his simplicity says these were "the only meetings held, as the records will convince anyone who cares to verify the statement." We have heard of a prisoner who, when charged by an eye-witness with sheep stealing at Albany on a certain day, triumphantly asked the jury to acquit him because his diary did not show that he was in Albany on that day. The jury however did not consider the defence a tenable one, and we have never heard their judgement disputed.

The defence put forward by this Albany rogue, is an exact parallel to that of the mark the case with which association comes to him. Stand him before the bar of the public, and let him answer. Did Mr. Cartwright, ever, and systematically, buy his way into Parliament at from $4 upwards per vote, and thus stultify enough electors to elect him? Did Mr. Cartwright ever deal out whiskey by the barrel to stultify and corrupt the morals of electors, and win an election?

The charge was specific, it is not and cannot be denied, but as a reply, this Liberal Conservative Association Champion strikes wildly at a man of straw, the creature of his own disturbed imagination, whom, in his fury, he mistakes for the Hon. Mr. Cartwright, and delivers himself of the above nonsensical tirade. We will for a moment treat seriously what no one can at first blush, help treating as a bit of silly twaddle, and we say that even if all the charges which he has sought to level at the Hon. the Minister of Finance were true, they are no answer whatever to the very serious and very truthful charges to which they purport to be a reply.

But although we might, we stop not here, we say and we defy successful contradiction, that as to each and every of the allegations and insinuations in the whole of the Standard's article derogatory to the Hon. Mr. Cartwright, in general and in particular, in letter and in spirit, "the charges are false." False in every particular, and the writer must either have known they were false or else he knew nothing of what he professed to write about. It is plain that he cannot have been cognizant of what transpired at any of the Hon. Gentleman's Elections, for no one who knew how such Elections have been managed by his opponents would even recall them to the elector's minds by charging Hon. Mr. Cartwright with either buying votes or dealing out whiskey. Whatever the Hon. Gentleman's friends may have done, it certainly does not lie in the mouths of opponents to reproach him in these respects, and they will not thank their present penny-a-liner for his awkward reference to their former evil practices.

Some may claim a certain consistency in carving sin, but the opponents of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright in this County may well shudder and recoil with shame and confusion when their spokesman blunders into charging him with spending money and dealing out whiskey at elections.

We pass over the writer's fulsome adulation of the County Council by saying that we have never attacked that Body, have not now anything but respectful and complimentary opinions to express concerning them and we repudiate the mean insinuation that we had said something reflecting upon their credit.

It will be quite time for us to explain when we have uttered a word in their disparagement. We are not so lost to the sense of decency as to resort to the shallow artifice of this writer, who is simply disgusting in his toadyism and lickspittle-fawning of the Council, because we have criticized the acts of certain members. The reason is not obscure, the Council have patronage to dispense, and hence the writer's eagerness to try to distort our just and appropriate criticisms by emptying his brains to fill his stomach.

In this connection we are sorry to date nominally selected by the Association but really to be selected by a knot of wire pullers in Toronto called the United Empire Club."

The Standard does not attempt to deny these statements but uses the stale device of saying "you'r another," and so thinks to find shelter by saying Mr. Cartwright did bad things at his elections.

The trio did peregrinate the County, did present the cast iron pledge, and establish their branches just as we said, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

He undoubtedly thought that the contempt which he so cordially invoked for us would follow his behest.

We do not feel at all sat upon. We do not even experience a trace of contempt. We think we shall survive. We have so turned the tables upon His Honor the Warden that we are confident the public will see that no matter whose efforts deserve "contempt" our own do not.

We now say that we did not make an "unfounded charge against the Reeves who constitute the County Council." We did not "impugn the integrity of the County Council." "The charges are" not "false," not "altogether without foundation" and do not "merit only contempt" What then becomes of the Warden's statement?

It is no disparagement of his Honor the Warden to say that a much wiser man than he, has put upon record the penitential statement "I said in mine haste, all men are liars," this lesser light in his haste, as in all charity we hope it was, says of our article, "It is false in every particular." Of course the Warden is an honorable man, he has without apparent consideration been tricked into signing communications (for we freely absolve his Honor from the blame of composing them) wherein he makes himself say that all the Express's statements are lies, and thereby has unfortunately for himself been betrayed into attacking without any foundation whatever, and without the slightest title of justification, the reputation for veracity of those to whom such reputation is as dear as his own, can be to him, Warden though he be. It is now in order for His Honor following his illustrious prototype, whose confession we quoted, and we shall expect him in all fairness to take up his parable and say. "In my haste I was made to say it is false in every particular, but I find that in every particular, it was true." If he do this we will freely forgive him and the lesson will probably not be lost upon him for all his future life. We await with calm confidence the result.

THE RESULT.

In conclusion our thanks Dr. Tupper and his colleague allusions to the Hon. "PACKING THE JURY."

The jury however did not consider the defence a tenable one, and we have never heard their judgement disputed.

The defence put forward by this Albany rogue, is an exact parallel to that of the Standard man. He simply defies us to convict his party out of their own records, and then as though such a simple subterfuge was conclusive evidence, he has the effrontery to say "the charge is false." Notwithstanding this flat denial, and this silly and transparent trick of trying to hoodwink his readers, we substantially and in every particular repeat our former allegations. We affirm that during the June session of the County Council, one or more meetings were held for the purpose of furthering, the political interests of the opposition party, that such meeting or meetings, were attended by the members of the Liberal Conservative Association, including members of the County Council, and that the business and objects of the gathering were of a purely party political character. We can, if our contemporary desires, give him the names of men who were present at one of the meetings and the place where it was held.

It is idle for them to attempt to wriggle out of it by flatly denying it, or asking us to read their records, or by saying they gave it another name. The meeting was attended by the same persons who attend the meetings of the Liberal Con-spirited and in particular, in every particular, "the charges are false." False in every particular, and the writer must either have known they were false or else he knew nothing of what he professed to write about. It is plain that he cannot have been cognizant of what transpired at any of the Hon. Gentleman's Elections, for no one who knew how such Elections have been managed by his opponents would even recall them to the elector's minds by charging Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT with either buying votes or dealing out whiskey. Whatever the Hon. Gentleman's friends may have done, it certainly does not lie in the mouths of opponents to reproach him in these respects, and they will not thank their present penny-a-liner for his awkward reference to their former evil practices.

Some may claim a certain consistency in reproving sin, but the opponents of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright in this County may well shudder and recoil with shame and confusion when their spokesman blunders into charging him with spending money and dealing out whiskey at elections.

We pass over the writer's fulsome adulation of the County Council by saying that we have never attacked that Body, have not now anything but respectful and complimentary opinions to express concerning them and we repudiate the mean insinuation that we had said something reflecting upon their credit.

It will be quite time for us to explain when we have uttered a word in their disparagement. We are not so lost to the sense of decency as to resort to the shallow artifice of this writer, who is simply disgusting in his toadyism and lickspittle fawning of the Council, because we have criticized the acts of certain members. The reason is not obscure, the Council have patronage to dispense, and hence the writer's eagerness to try to distort our just and appropriate criticisms by emptying his brains to fill his stomach.

In this connection we are sorry to notice that His Honor the Warden has thought it prudent to rush to the assistance of the Standard, and over his official signature brand our statement as unfounded. Not content with this, he has also published a similar communication in the Beaver.

We have never had other than a good opinion of the Warden, we certainly said not one word that could be tortured into an attack upon him, but now that he has chosen to publicly go out of his way to charge us with falsehood, he will not, we suppose, complain if we deal with him and his statements for a short time.

On the 4th Sept., he writes to the Standard as follows:—

A Denial.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—In the last issue of the Express I observe a most unfounded charge against the Reeves who constitute the County Council. It is false in every particular, and deserves only to be treated with contempt, which course I will pursue by making no further reference to it.

Yours &c.

It is no disparagement of his Honor the Warden to say that a much wiser man than he, has put upon record the penitential statement "I said in mine haste, all men are liars," this lesser light in his haste, as in all charity we hope it was, says of our article, "It is false in every particular." Of course the Warden is an honorable man, he has without apparent consideration been tricked into signing communications (for we freely absolve his Honor from the blame of composing them) wherein he makes himself say that all the Express's statements are lies, and thereby has unfortunately for himself been betrayed into attacking without any foundation whatever, and without the slightest title of justification, the reputation for veracity of those to whom such reputation is as dear as his own, can be to him, Warden though he be. It is now in order for His Honor following his illustrious prototype, whose contention we quoted, and we shall expect him in all fairness to take up his parole and say, "In my haste I was made to say it is false in every particular, but I find that in every particular, it was true." If he do this we will freely forgive him and the lesson will probably not be lost upon him for all his future life. We await with calm confidence the result.

ALMOST A FIZZLE—THE TORY PIC-NIC.

The Greatest Show on Earth, Sir. John as Chief Barnum, has come and gone. Tuesday was the day, and twelve o'clock the hour. A tawdry procession of thirty-two waggons and two Band waggons made up the magnificent cavalcade that carried the Galaxy of Star Performers, Two thousand people including men, women, boys and babies, were on the grounds to witness the Antics of the Great Combination. The nurses and babies from Belleville, who availed themselves of a twenty-five cents round trip excursion, alone saved the affair from being in point of numbers a complete fizzle.

Among those who attended the Conservative Demonstration on Tuesday, were included a large number of farmers who brought their grain to market, and others from a distance whose business made it convenient for them to take advantage of the cheap excursions to and from the town.

THE 'HEAVY MAN' SPEAKS.

The Tories had worked hard to erect and decorate half-a-dozen evergreen arches through which the procession, led by the Chief, passed on its way to the Palace grounds, the use of which had been kindly granted by the Hon. member for Lennox as the most convenient circus field in the vicinity. Arriving at the 'Grand Stand' four addresses were presented, and replied to by Sir. John, after which Dr. Tupper, (John A's right bower) was called upon, and duly received with cheers from the Faithful. The worthy Doctor appeared with a sheet of

And notwithstanding absurd and lying declarations Tory organs to the contrary, the affair was a failure—politically, financially, and morally.

THEY REFRESH EXHAUSTED NATION.

John A. and Troupe proceeded evening to the Music Hall, where were 'wined and dined' by their friends. About 150 sat down to the timely repast, to which amity was done—we are told—Chief and his followers, whose titles were sharpened by the exertion, but unconvincing and useless of the preceding six hours.

We have Captain Pender's statement that the Kincardine carried 500, Napanee Standard says 800, asserts that 12000 attended the show—Verily, "Truth (!) is stranger than fiction."

WHERE TO FIND IT.

We have a few copies left, of the sore to the Opposition—The Finance Minister's now celebrated market speech, which on Tuesday gained its own against the malicious interested attacks of the most noxious vilifiers the Dominion can produce should be read by all, as it is the position and refutation of Tory extant.

"Wanted to Know, You Know."

Among other incidents attending late visit of the Conservative Chief the town of Cobourg, was one not recorded in the columns of the Express. It appears that the good people of Cobourg are not only "educated intelligent," as Sir JOHN describes majority of the people of Ontario they are a reading, thinking and discerning class, who are not content others think for them, but insist on something in that line for themselves. They were not only willing to hear Sir JOHN had to say, but they even the trouble to let him know in a upon what subjects they particularly desired to hear from him. When Chief, mounted the rostrum, from the Cobourg World, a printer of the following questions was placed in his hands:—

1. Why he swore by his oath of office, Dufferin, that the charges against him for giving the chart for building the Pacific way to Sir Hugh Allan for money to elections, were entirely false and untrue.
2. Why, when the same charges were the House of Commons by the Hon. L. S. Ingham, the Chief called upon his witness, that the charges were entirely untrue and that there was not one word in them.
3. If the Chief is not still bound to Sir Hugh Allan, out of the public money Dominion, $350,000, which Sir Hugh advanced and his colleagues to carry the election 1872 and whether he would not do so if he again get his hands (clean hands) into the chest.
4. How much of that money was paid to the expenses of the Tory candidates in the Dominion, East Durham and South Ontario, and whether he would give a detailed account of the distribution of Sir Hugh's money.
5. The Chief will also explain when tends to pay back the balance of Secret money.
6. Why he in Parliament refused a special audit of Secret Service money.
7. How much of the money he actually watching the Fenians, and how much of it was among his poor and needy fellow party supporters.

A Decided Denial.

To the Editor of THE BRAVER.

DEAR SIR.—Will you allow me space sufficient to deny the assertions made by the Napanee Express of last week, in the article headed "Packing the Jury" impeaching the integrity of the county council. The charges are false and altogether without foundation, and merit only contempt.

Yours truly,
W. N. DOLLER, Warden.

NAPANEE, Sept. 5th, 1877.

Let us examine the facts. We stated in the article of which he complains, that a Liberal Conservative Association had been formed. Such an Association has been formed and neither he nor the Standard can deny it, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR." We said "meetings had been held with this object in view." The Standard says, meetings were held on the 24th May, 30th June, 21st July, 11th and 25th August, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR." We said "the gatherings for Municipal purposes have been utilized in the same way," we have already shown that the June session of the County Council was utilized by certain Members of the Council, by holding a meeting or meetings for party political purposes, we repeat the statement and challenge contradiction of the fact, but the Warden says "the charges are false, AND ALTOGETHER WITHOUT FOUNDATION."

We said "their organ vulgarly boasted that the Association had for its President the Warden of the County." The Warden is the President, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We said, "The really thoughtful men of both parties have been struggling for some years past to banish the baneful spirit of party from Municipal affairs." The really thoughtful men have been so striving—a fact so well known, that it goes without saying, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We said "a certain trio of the faithful few have been making peripatetic journeys to each school section for the purpose of establishing branches of the concern" * * * "the worthies have the cheek and the hardihood to ask Electors to sign a cast iron pledge to vote for the Candidate nominally selected by the Association but really to be selected by a knot of wire pullers in Toronto called the United Empire Club."

The Standard does not attempt to deny these statements but uses the stale device of saying "you're another," and so thinks to find shelter by saying Mr. CARTWRIGHT did bad things at his elections.

The trio did peregrinate the County, did present the cast iron pledge, and establish their branches just as we said, but the Warden says our statement is "FALSE IN EVERY PARTICULAR."

We pause, for want of space, not for want of opportunity to show how reckless and unfortunate His Honor the Warden has been in gratifying his vanity by attempting to use his official character in the public prints to stamp us with falsehood. He undoubtedly thought that the contempt which he so cordially invoked for us would follow his behest.

We do not feel at all sat upon. We do not even experience a trace of contempt.

foolseap, upon which were pasted a few carefully selected extracts from Mr. Cartwright's Newmarket speech, (clipped from the Express of last Friday) and which were used to refresh his memory while he made strenuous and apparently useless efforts to convince his listeners of the falsity of their statements. A great many important points, in the speech in question, were not even alluded to, and the Doctor should have heard the expressions of dissatisfaction from his conservative backers, who had carefully read the article from which his text was taken, and who expected he would have taken up the speech seriatim and refuted its facts and figures in a fair and business-like manner, instead of jumping to unwarrantable conclusions, which only served to whet the appetite of his hearers for a more careful review of Mr. Cartwright's statements, which have received more attention from staunch old Tories in this section, both before and after the demonstration, than the leaders of the Opposition have any idea of.

Dr. Tupper was followed by Mr. Thos. White jr., of Montreal, Mr. T. N. Gibbs of Oshawa, and Mr. Wm. McDougall of Toronto, each of whom followed in the Doctors' footsteps, and although they gave an abundant flow of oratory, they presented a small amount of facts and we may say, their, in some instances, violent harangues, fell far short of their allotted mark, and were mainly directed towards disparaging the present administration, and the financial management of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright.

SIR JOHN'S CLOSING FARCE.]

As Mr. McDougall concluded, a desire to see the Master of Ceremonies, the Great Sir John, was plainly manifest from the expectant looks of the scores of ladies seated in front of the 'Grand Stand,' many of whom had come from a distance to see the show and the Hero of the Day, a sight of whom seemed to be the principal attraction. (John A., was in the meantime inspecting the appointments like any well-regulated showman, and doing a little private hand-shaking throughout the grounds.) The band struck up "See the Wandering Hero comes." He came—to the footlights—smiling like a sunbeam, the smile was returned with interest by his hosts of lady admirers, as Sir John kept time to the music, while the ladies audibly criticized his faultless 'get up,' his curling locks and jaunty air. The music ceasing, the Chieftain delivered himself of a few of his stereotyped speeches with becoming grace, addressing himself principally to the ladies which was duly acknowledged by the waving of delicate cambrics and a sea of smiles, enough to intimidate the most imperturbable statesmen in existence, but the invincible John A., (the funny man of the troupe) being used to these things, was in no wise disturbed, and stood the trying ordeal with the equanimity of a Dan Rice, or a Jack O'Brien. He finally wound up by cracking his usual stale jokes and quoting his poetry, amid the mirth and delight of the audience—who thought Sir John would have been a success as a showman, but as a statesman he was a dead failure. And a Government were defeated and went out of office they had a right to take all the Secret Service money at their credit and spend it for party and political purposes.

9. The Chieftain will also explain why he has not paid back to the Government the $2,500 which Senator McPherson procured from the Northern Railway Company, and gave him.

10. When he intends to pay it back.

11. When the Chieftain intends to pay back the $1,000 which he took from the Northern Railway funds, and gave Sir Francis Hincks, to buy up the electors of Renfrew.

12. Why the Chieftain, under false pretences, took upwards of $500 from the poor settlers on ordinance lands, and why he refuses to pay it back.

13. Why he violated the Independence of Parliament Act by his contract as Attorney and Solicitor with his own government, and why he does not resign his seat for that cause.

14. Why he instructed the Mail newspaper to oppose the Dunkin Act in Toronto, and why he left Murray Bay and returned to Toronto to assist in opposing the Act throughout the whole of the voting.

15. Why he does not present himself to be sworn in as a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

16. Why the Chieftain at Peterboro' called upon God to witness his anxiety to catch Reil, when only a few days before he had with his own clean hands sent $4,000 of Government money to be given Reil to leave the country.

17. Why the Chieftain, calling himself a Protectionist, reduced the tariff from 20 to 15 per cent when in office.

Sir JOHN, however, did not seem to relish the discussion of his own meretricious conduct as leader of the late Government. The questions, as will be seen, in view of the fact that the person principally concerned in them in asking to be placed at the head of the Government of the country, are pertinent ones—doubtless Sir JOHN thought them impertinent ones. At all events, although he had some hours to consider the subject, and consult his colleagues in the leadership of the Opposition, during the speeches of Messrs. CAMERON, MCCARTHY, PLUMB and McDUGALL, he did not "find time" on that occasion to enter into the desired explanations, much to the disappointment of his audience, a great many of whom had come there specially to be edified upon these points. The only reply upon which he felt justified in entering is reported in the Mail as follows:—"He would like very much to go into all the attacks that had been made upon him personally and the shortcomings of the present Government, but time would tell. He could say that the present government was corrupt." This was of course somewhat unsatisfactory, but as the curiosity of the electors of East Northumberland is shaded by people throughout the Dominion, it is to be hoped that Sir JOHN will find the necessary "time" to "go into" all these matters, and give a categorical reply to the seventeen interrogations submitted to him. It is very much to be doubted, however, if he feels in a position to give satisfactory explanations in reference to the various subjects alluded to in the requisition of those disagreeable people, who "wanted to know, you know." The public will nevertheless enter upon the investigation upon their own account, and the conclusion at which they must arrive, in view of the evidence in their hands, is not one likely to redound to the honor, honesty or integrity of the Chieftain, or to promote his chances of regaining the high position in the country which he once held, and which, unfortunately for the credit of the country and for his own reputation as a public man, he so grossly prostituted and abused. However, these enquiries are still open to an answer at his hands, if he but choose to so far oblige the public.—Ottawa Free Press.

Sir John A. Macdonald And The County of Lennox.

In view of to-day's proceedings at Napanee it may interest our readers to be provided with a short resume of Sir John's former raids into that good country. The first of these seems to have occurred in 1861, when "our chieftain" made his appearance at Napanee to advocate the cause of the late David Roblin against Mr. Augustus Hooper. Sir John

We do not feel at all sat upon. We do not even experience a trace of contempt. We think we shall survive. We have so turned the tables upon His Honor the Warden that we are confident the public will see that no matter whose efforts deserve "contempt" our own do not.

We now say that we did not make an "unfounded charge against the Reeves who constitute the County Council." We did not "impugn the integrity of the County Council." "The charges are" not "false," not "altogether without foundation" and do not "merit only contempt." What then becomes of the Warden's statement?

THE RESULT.

In conclusion our thanks are due to Dr. Tupper and his colleagues for their allusions to the Hon. Mr. Cartwright's speech (reprinted in the Express, of 7th inst.) and which was the means of giving the article a notoriety, it would not otherwise have received, and they certainly 'put their foot in it' when they attempted to villify the statements contained therein, by using extracts—(garbled for the occasion)—to substantiate their views, in the face of the publicity given to the exhaustive and truthful Newmarket speech, previous to and during the Demonstration. Sir John A. Macdonald And The County of Lennox.

The first of these seems to have occurred in 1861, when "our chieftain" made his appearance at Napanee to advocate the cause of the late David Roblin against Mr. Augustus Hooper. Sir John was very well received, and made a witty speech, in the course of which he elegantly declared his intention of having Mr. Hooper to "black his shoes." Mr. Hooper was elected by a majority of 463 votes.

Sir John's next incursion is, we doubt not, still fresh in the memory of our readers, and took place when Hon. Mr. Cartwright assumed office as Minister of Finance. Sir John (Mr. Cartwright having kindly forwarded a check in payment of his expenses) took the stump in great state. The Hon. Mr. Cartwright was elected by a majority of 837 votes.

We sincerely wish Sir John an equally marked success on the present occasion, and have no doubt he will prove in the ultimate result nearly as useful to the Hon. Mr. Cartwright as he was before. From our knowledge of Mr. Cartwright's liberality to local objects we have no hesitation in saying that gentlemen would have readily subscribed for the purpose of bringing Sir John once more to Napanee. As it is, we understand that the Hon. member for Lennox very liberally accorded the whole Tory troupe permission to exhibit on his grounds. To the merits of the exhibition itself we shall take occasion to refer in a future issue.

Napanee Sept, 13th, 1877.

To the Editor of the Napanee EXPRESS.

DEAR SIR:—Will you allow me to ask through your columns a question or two, regarding the movements of the Conservative procession on Tuesday last. Why did the procession halt at the residence of Father McDonagh? Why did the Band play "St. Patrick's Day," was it carrying out the programme of the said procession, or was it the act of an individual? Whatever party it may be, Reform or Conservative, their cause must be very weak when they seek the support of any sect Catholic or Protestant, by such acts as that of last Tuesday, and I as one humble voter will not support any man or party who makes use of such means to gain political influence and power.

I remain yours truly,

A CONSERVATIVE.

The Fishery Commission.

A DECISION UPSETTING ONE PORTION OF THE CANADIAN CASE.

HALIFAX, Sept. 8.—The Fishery Commission, it is understood, gave a decision yesterday previous to adjournment which completely destroys the idea that the Washington Treaty put an end to all disputes relative to the North American fisheries. If report is correct, and it seems to be well founded, the counsel acting for the United States asked the Commissioners to rule that the Commission did not consider it within their province to award compensation or take into consideration the advantage to American fishermen in British waters of transshipping cargoes or buying bait, ice, and supplies. Two days were spent over the argument of the question, nearly all the counsel of both sides taking part. The counsel for Great Britain took strong ground against the proposition, for a large portion of the British case was devoted to pointing out the advantages to American fishermen of being in a position to purchase bait and supplies, a claim for large compensation being founded thereon. The American counsel contended that the Washington Treaty gave no such

The Mormon Church.

A CIRCULAR FROM THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

SAK T LAKE, Sept. 20.—The Apostles of the Mormon Church joined by E. W. Young and Daniel H. Wells, late counsellors of Brigham Young, publish a circular saying that Sept. 4th they held a meeting and waited upon the Lord, who blessed them, and who revealed to them the steps they should take. John Taylor, Senior Apostle, acting President of the Twelve, was unanimously sustained in that position. The quorum of the Twelve Apostles is the presiding quorum and authority of the Church. This plan was pursued at the time of the death of Joseph Smith, and was so ordered by Smith and sustained by Brigham. To facilitate the transaction of business, it was ordered that President John Taylor be assisted by John W. Young, Daniel H. Wells, and George F. Cannon. The circular claims the last days are at hand, and all saints are exhorted to be faithful in building temples and paying tithing.

Frank Leslie Insolvent

"Frank Leslie of New York, has been compelled to make an assignment liabilities, $320,000. His assets are represented by the following publications:—Illustrated News, Illustrated Times, Chimney Corner, Illustrated Zeitung, Boys and Girls Weekly, Ladies Journal, Sunday Magazine, Boys of America, Jolly Joker, and Budget of Fun; by his large printing and engraving establishment, with its presses, machinery, and fixtures, and a considerable establishment at Interlaken, near Saratoga. Leslie's embarrassments arise largely from too extended investments in real estate. Arrangements have been made whereby his publications will be continued."

The principal sufferer by the failure is the firm of Rice, Kendall, & Co., paper manufacturers, of Boston.

THE WAR NEWS.

THE POSITION OF THE BELLIGERENTS.

A New York paper publishes an exceedingly sensational and exaggerated telegram to the effect that Europe is on verge of a general war. European despatches make no mention of any foundation for this premature statement, the Powers still maintaining their reserve, with the single exception of Germany, who, it is stated, entirely approves of Serbian participation in the war, and is prepared to guarantee the statu quo in the event of defeat. The European Cabinet appear to be agreed, according to a more reasonable account, as to the undesirability of intervention, feeling that any attempt to interfere at present would merely lead to a hollow peace, which would speedily end in the resumption of the struggle. As it is, both the belligerents are exhausting their strength, and if allowed to continue the contest they will be in no position to resume the sword for some time to come.

ALLEGED RUSSIAN CRUELITIES.

The Porte's latest circular accuses the Russians with tarring a captured Turkish soldier, and compelling him to stand three days in the sun, after having been beaten and otherwise maltreated. It also says the Montenegrins have renewed the fearful usage of subjecting the prisoners to horrible mutilations, and inflict it on non-combatants, even on children. Seven children, boys and girls belonging to the village of Globodja in the district of Podgoritz, having fallen into their hands, have suffered most fearful treatment. One of them had his ears and nose cut off, another his arms crushed, and with the exception of one who escaped from his tormentors, the fate of the others is unknown.

Complimentary.
The Dunville Gazette, of the 30th ult., contained the following complimentary farewell to Mr. Osborne, principal of the County Model School here, on the occasion of his resignation of his duties in that place: "On Friday last Mr. A. C. Osborne, who has for nearly two years held the position of Principal of the Public School in this town, resigned his situation. His resignation was due to the fact that he had received the appointment of Principal of the Napanee County Model School, and on Saturday Mr. Osborne left in order to be present at the opening of the Model School on Monday. During the period Mr. Osborne has presided over educational affairs in the Public Schools here he has always been distinguished for the untiring energy with which he sought to bring schools back to a state of efficiency and that his efforts have not been without success is abundantly evident when the state of the schools to-day is contrasted with what they were when he assumed charge. We recommend him strongly to the people of Napanee, assured that they will find in him an excellent teacher and thoroughly upright gentleman."

The idea of the Americans seems to be that a large number of our people, being interested in trade with the American fishermen, will prevent the Dominion Government from interfering with the latter. The Commissioners gave a unanimous decision that they were incompetent to award compensation for the transshipment of cargoes in British waters or for the purchase of ice, bait, and supplies. Sir A. T. Galt, it is said, stated when the decision was given that there was no help for it, they were bound by the strict working of the Washington Treaty.

THEY WRECK TRAINS AND COMMIT MURDER.

COLUMBIA, Pa., Sept. 10.—Vigilantes are organizing against the tramps, who are numerous and troublesome. At Graybell's Woods, near Lancaster, recently a hundred outlaws raided on farmers, who tried unsuccessfully to drive them off. Policemen and citizens from Lancaster went to their aid. The tramps opened fire with pistols. The police charged them when the tramps retreated, leaving five wounded. A farmer named Powers was fatally hurt. Further along the Pennsylvania railroad tramps boarded a freight train and threatened to take possession. Detectives from Columbia hastened to the scene and captured eight outlaws, who subsequently broke jail. Milton Gramm, a prominent citizen of Darazoon, was robbed and killed by two tramps as he left the train at Marysville recently. Tramps wrecked a freight train between Malvston and Fraser's station, and attempted to plunder the cars. During a fight with train hands, one of the latter, Wm. Corvers, was killed. The authorities of Westchester sent assistance, and two outlaws were captured. Detectives have discovered notorious city criminals travelling disguised as tramps.

The Turks never attacked at all, nor is the Russian success of the proportions first represented. Loftcha is an open town in a valley, important chiefly as covering the roads to Trajan and Selvi.

THE STRIKES.

The divisions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers meeting in Philadelphia, have just received an important letter from Arthur, the chief of the Brotherhood, calling attention to the Brotherhood's national convention at Boston on October 10th. It is hinted that the principal object of the convention is to organize a general strike throughout the country on all the trunk lines. The officers of the Brotherhood deny that their order is organizing.

The strikers of the Lehigh region have resolved upon a general uprising if the military threaten arrests. 5,000 members of secret orders are drilling with weapons in Hyde Park, a suburb of Scranton. The Molly Maguires are trying to induce the railroad employees to unite in a general strike on the 15th, but the railroad men say they have had enough of strikes.

The farmers and residents of the small villages are organizing a vigilance committee for protection against railroading strikes.

Norfolk Reform Demonstration.

The Reformers of both Ridings of Norfolk have entered jointly into the work of preparing for the political picnic which comes off near the town of Simcoe on the 21st inst. Those engaged in getting up the meetings are determined to make it as successful as any yet held, and are in hopes that it will be the greatest gathering of the series. The Premier, the Minister of Finance, the Hon Mr. Huntington, the Hon Mr. Mowat, and several other members of the Dominion Parliament and the Ontario Legislature have signified their intention to be present. Arrangements have been entered into with all the railroads for the issue of return tickets at single fare, and the most complete and elaborate preparations have been made for the comfort and entertainment of visitors. Brigham Young.

The Mormon Prophet's History.

BIRTH AND EARLY LIFE OF THE CHIEF OF THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS—MORMONISM FROM 1852 DOWN TO THE PRESENT—THE SETTLEMENT IN UTAH—THE MORMON SUCCESSION.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S CAREER.

Brigham Young was born at Whitingham, Windham Co., Vt., on the 1st of June, 1801. His father, John Young, was a farmer in indifferent circumstances, with a family of five sons and six daughters, Brigham being the fourth son and ninth child. At the age of sixteen John Young joined the Revolutionary Army, and served in three campaigns under Gen. Washington. In 1785 he married Nabby, a daughter of Phineas and Susannah Howe, the mother of Brigham, and settled down as a farmer in Hopkinton, Middlesex Co., Mass., his birthplace. We are told he was "very circumspect, exemplary, and religious," and that he was from an early period of his life a member of the Methodist Church. He afterward, however, became a Mormon, and was constituted First Patriarch of the Church. He died at Quincy, Ill., on the 12th of October, 1839, at the age of 76. In the earlier years of his life Brigham Young worked with his father on the farm in Sherburne, Chenango county, N. Y., whither his father had removed in 1804. The family appears to have entered the hardships and privations commonly met with in new settlements, and none of them had opportunities of any but the most primary form of education. Brigham afterward learned the trade of painter and glazier, an occupation which he followed till he was 31 years of age, when the whole current of his life was changed in consequence of his conversion to Mormonism. In 1833 he was converted by Samuel H., a brother of Joseph Smith, and, having embraced the Mormon faith, was baptized by Eleazer Miller. At Kirtland, Ohio, where he joined the Saints, he became intimate with Joseph Smith, was ordained an Elder, and began to preach, his shrewdness, knowledge of character, and strength of will quickly acquiring for him some measure of that influence and power in the Church which afterward became so absolutely overwhelming. On the 14th of February, 1835, Brigham was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church, of whom he became President in the following year, on the apostacy of Thomas B. Marsh. The persecution of the Mormons soon came, and Joe Smith and Brigham Young fled for their lives. After many hairbreadth escapes and trials they succeeded in rallying together the brethren and sisters who had not apostatized, and they founded a new Mormon colony in Missouri, Brigham securing a still greater share of influence and power. Again persecution came upon the Saints, and they returned to Illinois. In 1840 Brigham was sent to England as a missionary. He commenced preaching in Liverpool immediately, issued an edition of the Book of Mormons, and started a periodical called the Millennial Star. His success as a preacher was immense and immediate. In less than a year he had successfully organized several churches, and in 1841, he sailed from Liverpool for New York in company with 769 emigrant converts. That one year wrought a great work in England. Its influence is felt to this day. But encouraging as the results of Brigham's mission was to the faithful, dark days indeed were in store for them. In 1844 came the riot at Nauvoo, the shooting of Smith, scattering of the Twelve Apostles, and the assumption of the Mormon Presidency by Sydney Rigdon. Brigham was in Boston at the time of these and murmurs and complaints were loud and bitter. But his restless energy kept down any more marked demonstrations of discontent, and when they at last reached Salt Lake he kept them so hard at work that they had little time to complain, and set them the best example he could by working himself harder than he worked any one of them. In this way he consolidated his power over them. But it was the power born of fear, not of love, for he ruled them after the fashion of an Oriental despot. But he gave them enough to eat. To this they had not been always accustomed, and they thanked and blessed him in a certain manner.

The termination of the Mexican war gave Brigham Young the opportunity of securing for his people the protection and recognition of the United States Government, and of adding to the glory, importance and stability of his own position. A Mormon convention was held on the 15th of March 1849, the Constitution of the proposed State of Deseret was drawn up, and delegates were sent to Washington to ask that Deseret might be admitted into the Union. The question was brought up in Congress and eventuated on the 9th of September, 1850, in considerable modifications of Brigham's scheme and the grant of a Territorial Government under the name of Utah. Brigham Young was appointed by President Fillmore to be the first Governor of the new Territory for a term of four years, and Heber Chase Kimball, Daniel H. Wells, and other leading men of the Church, filled the other offices. Thus did Mormonism gain a local habitation and a name in the United States. The first Legislature of the Territory of Utah met on the 22nd of September, 1851. In the meantime Brigham's energy was showing fruit. Towns and villages were springing up, public buildings were being erected, roads were planned and constructed, cities laid out, the Tabernacle was built, and the Mormons began to see prosperity in the future. At this time they numbered a population of, according to the official census, 11,380 persons; a population which was doubled in the two following years. The females outnumbered the males—a thing unknown in other Anglo-Scandinavian colonies. The political situation of the Mormons at this time was what it has ever since, more or less, remained—universal anfrage, after the fashion of imperial France, with a strong admixture of Russian autocracy. Every man had a vote, but all were supposed to vote by direction and counsel of the Lord, through his prophet, Brigham Young. Socially, the Mormons were no better than a horde of peasants, bound to obey the bidding of the sultan. By tricks and stratagems Brigham Young succeeded in ridding the Mormon territory of all the Federal authorities, till at last Utah was virtually in a state of rebellion against the Federal Government. The Mormon war of 1857 was the result.

In 1857 occurred the infamous Mountain Meadow massacre. For his part in this terrible outrage, as is sufficiently fresh in our readers' memories, John D. Lee last year met his death on the very spot made memorable by his crime. Brigham Young's connection with the massacre has never been judicially established, though there is no doubt that a strong feeling has always existed in the public mind that the unfortunate emigrants met their cruel fate by his orders.

Brigham Young's career during the last ten years is familiar to all. During the war of the rebellion he and his coadjutors remained almost entirely quiescent though having a leaning toward secession. This is easily accountable. Though not a slave Territory in the sense which characterized the Southern States, Utah was committed to the purchasing and holding of slaves, by an Act passed by the Territorial Legislature on Jan. 31,

Kimball should become President. But the office of President is purely secular. The spiritual headship—the high position of Prophet, Seer, Revelator—will be the great bone of contention. It has been often stated that Brigham Young would reveal to the Saints of Utah by will the person to succeed him. Again, it is claimed that his successor will be appointed by special divine revelation after Brigham's death. The probabilities of succession will lie between Joseph Young, the eldest son of Brigham, and David, the second and posthumous son of Joseph Smith, Joe Smith's eldest son being a schismatic. While there is a large body of supporters of the dynasty of Brigham Young, the dynasty of the first prophet and founder of the Mormon religion has a very great and enthusiastic adherence.

That one year wrought a great work in England. Its influence is felt to this day. But encouraging as the results of Brigham's mission was to the faithful, dark days indeed were in store for them. In 1844 came the riot at Nauvoo, the shooting of Smith, scattering of the Twelve Apostles, and the assumption of the Mormon Presidency by Sydney Rigdon. Brigham was in Boston at the time of these untoward occurrences; but he hurried off to Nauvoo immediately, knowing well that his opportunity had arrived. Four persons were ambitious of the Mormon Presidency, though according to the Mormon law, it belonged of right to Rigdon. Brigham, however, secured this position for himself by a bold coup d'état. He summoned the people together, denounced the other aspirants and their adherents as children of the devil—especially Rigdon—and even went so far as to curse Rigdon and hand him over "to the buffetings of Satan for a thousand years." He would not condescend to reason with those opposed to him, and carried the position by sheer audacity and force of character. His energy was simply overwhelming. It stupefied all his enemies, while it raised him up a host of friends; the more so when, in his new office, he at once exhibited marked administrative ability. He set to work to complete the great temple; he built a mansion house, and, in increasing the prosperity of Nauvoo, increased his own popularity and power.

But, even before the completion of the temple, in 1845, Brigham foresaw the necessity of a migration further westward, and he gradually led the minds of his people to the same view. They hesitated to desert their temple. Brigham preached and argued with the enthusiastic fervor of the old crusaders, roused the hatred of his people against the "Gentiles," and finally worked them up to a readiness to follow him anywhere. In 1846 the great migration began; thousands of the Saints left their homes—all of them poor and many of them destitute—to seek an indefinite home somewhere in the Rocky Mountains. They crossed the Mississippi on the ice in February, with about as vague an idea of the locality of their ultimate destination as the Israelites had of the land of Canaan, except that they were assured by Brigham that it was to be a land flowing with milk and honey. In the following winter the Mormons established themselves at Kanab, now Council Bluffs, in Iowa, where their sufferings and privations were intense. Their poverty was so great that numbers of them were in a starving condition, and many of them resorted to stealing cattle and horses as a means of subsistence. At this time, by the exercise of some diplomacy at Washington, Brigham received $20,000 bounty money from National Government for raising a Mormon battalion of soldiers for Gen. Scott's army in Mexico. The poor people political situation of the Mormons at this time was what it has ever since, more or less, remained—universal enmity, after the fashion of imperial France, with a strong admixture of Russian autocracy. Every man had a vote, but all were supposed to vote by direction and counsel of the Lord, through his prophet, Brigham Young. Socially, the Mormons were no better than a horde of peasants, bound to obey the bidding of the sultan. By tricks and stratagems Brigham Young succeeded in ridding the Mormon territory of all the Federal authorities, till at last Utah was virtually in a state of rebellion against the Federal Government. The Mormon war of 1857 was the result.

In 1857 occurred the infamous Mountain Meadow massacre. For his part in this terrible outrage, as is sufficiently fresh in our readers' memories, John D. Lee last year met his death on the very spot made memorable by his crime. Brigham Young's connection with the massacre has never been judicially established, though there is no doubt that a strong feeling has always existed in the public mind that the unfortunate emigrants met their cruel fate by his orders.

Brigham Young's career during the last ten years is familiar to all. During the war of the rebellion he and his coadjutors remained almost entirely quiescent though having a leaning toward secession. This is easily accountable. Though not a slave Territory in the sense which characterized the Southern States, Utah was committed to the purchasing and holding of slaves, by an Act passed by the Territorial Legislature on Jan. 31, 1852, entitled "An Act for the relief of Indian slaves and prisoners." But during the last ten years, Brigham has principally occupied himself in carrying out as far as possible his favored idea that Utah contained the elements of everything needed by civilized man, and that by the establishment of manufactories and the production of silk and cotton, both of which had been started, the Mormon Territory might be independent of the world. His great aim was to prevent the Saints from trading with the Gentiles. At one time he proposed putting down wages to a scale so low that no Gentile could afford to work under it. Then he tried the organization of every settler in the Territory into a co-operative society. Finally he instituted the Order of Enoch, an organization on communistic principles, which did not meet with the desired success. At the time of the conception of the Pacific Railroad, Brigham Young at first exhibited some hostility to the undertaking; but, finding that it was to be an accomplished fact, he afterwards supported it, and the Mormons paid for the construction of the Utah branch of the road, between Ogden and Salt Lake City, Brigham himself being the principal stockholder in this important connection. The last years of Brigham Young's life were sorely tried by the action directed by the United States Courts against polygamy. He and other leading Mormons were arraigned before the Grand Jury at the instance of the United States District Attorney, and, after much delay, were arrested and held by Judge McKean in $5,000 bail each.

Brigham Young's family relations are matters of common notoriety. He married early in life in his own state of Vermont, but was soon left a widower with two daughters, both of whom subsequently embraced the Mormon faith and contracted polygamous marriages. Shortly after his wife's death he married Mary Ann Angell, who was, as he claimed in his answer to the petition for divorce and annulment of his nineteenth wife—Ann Eliza—his only lawful wife. She bore Brigham five children—Joseph, Brigham A., John, Alice and Luna. Lucy Decker Seely was his first wife in "plurality," and the first child, Brigham Heber, was the first-born in Mormon polygamy. Since then Brigham's domestic relations have been extended almost indefinitely, with his plural, proxy and sealed wives. But Amelia Folsom was the favorite wife of old age. She was born in Portsmouth, N. H., is tall and well formed.

Will Cure Consumption.

TO all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan:—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery and will send the recipe—PURE or CHANGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

adherents as children of the devil—especially Rigdon—and even went so far as to curse Rigdon and hand him over "to the buffets of Satan for a thousand years." He would not condescend to reason with those opposed to him, and carried the position by sheer audacity and force of character. His energy was simply overwhelming. It silenced all his enemies, while it raised him up a host of friends; the more so when, in his new office, he at once exhibited marked administrative ability. He set to work to complete the great temple; he built a mansion house, and, in increasing the prosperity of Nauvoo, increased his own popularity and power.

But, even before the completion of the temple, in 1845, Brigham foresaw the necessity of a migration further westward, and he gradually led the minds of his people to the same view. They hesitated to desert their temple. Brigham preached and argued with the enthusiastic fervor of the old crusaders, roused the hatred of his people against the "Gentiles," and finally worked them up to a readiness to follow him anywhere. In 1846 the great migration began; thousands of the Saints left their homes—all of them poor and many of them destitute—to seek an indefinite home somewhere in the Rocky Mountains. They crossed the Mississippi on the ice in February, with about as vague an idea of the locality of their ultimate destination as the Israelites had of the land of Canaan, except that they were assured by Brigham that it was to be a land flowing with milk and honey. In the following winter the Mormons established themselves at Kanabesville, now Council Bluffs, in Iowa, where their sufferings and privations were intense. Their poverty was so great that numbers of them were in a starving condition, and many of them resorted to stealing cattle and horses as a means of subsistence. At this time, by the exercise of some diplomacy at Washington, Brigham received $20,000 bounty money from National Government for raising a Mormon battalion of soldiers for Gen. Scott's army in Mexico. The poor people obeyed the command of their President without much murmuring, for nothing could be worse than the life they were then enduring. Brigham expended part of the money in an exploring expedition west of the Rocky Mountains. In the spring of 1847 the expedition, consisting of Brigham and 143 men, left Kanabesville. On the 24th of July they reached Salt Lake, and after leaving a few of the party to commence farming operations the remainder returned to Kanabesville, where they found their people almost starving, and decimated by fever and cholera. Brigham determined to move the entire body of the Church to Salt Lake, a gigantic undertaking, considering that they had to travel a distance of over 1,000 miles and to traverse the Rocky Mountains. To carry this intention into effect he felt that he must have more power. That could only be obtained by his assumption of the attributes of Smith, as the prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Mormon people. This he did on the 24th of December, 1847, during the delivery of one of the most remarkable and impassioned sermons he ever preached. The effect of his language and demeanor, theatrical as they were, had the desired effect. Women screamed and fainted, the male Saints wept, and all exclaimed "The mantle of Joseph has fallen upon Brigham!" When quiet was restored Brigham Young was elected "President of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints in all the World," an election which was afterwards ratified at a General Conference held on the 6th of April, 1848. In the same year Brigham moved his people to Salt Lake. The privations they suffered during their long journey were fearful, and numbers of them perished on the road. Half-starved, gloomy faces looked to Brigham for aid and encouragement. Everything depended upon him, both of which had started, the Mormon Territory might be independent of the world. His great aim was to prevent the Saints from trading with the Gentiles. At one time he proposed putting down wages to a scale so low that no Gentile could afford to work under it. Then he tried the organization of every settlement in the Territory into a co-operative society. Finally he instituted the Order of Enoch, an organization on communistic principles, which did not meet with the desired success. At the time of the conception of the Pacific Railroad, Brigham Young at first exhibited some hostility to the undertaking; but, finding that it was to be an accomplished fact, he afterwards supported it, and the Mormons paid for the construction of the Utah branch of the road, between Ogden and Salt Lake City, Brigham himself being the principal stockholder in this important connection. The last years of Brigham Young's life were sorely tried by the action directed by the United States Courts against polygamy. He and other leading Mormons were arraigned before the Grand Jury at the instance of the United States District Attorney, and, after much delay, were arrested and held by Judge McKean in $5,000 bail each.

Brigham Young's family relations are matters of common notoriety. He married early in life in his own state of Vermont, but was soon left a widower with two daughters, both of whom subsequently embraced the Mormon faith and contracted polygamic marriages. Shortly after his wife's death he married Mary Ann Angell, who was, as he claimed in his answer to the petition for divorce and alimony of his nineteenth wife—Ann Eliza—his only lawful wife. She bore Brigham five children—Joseph, Brigham A., John, Alice and Luna. Lucy Decker Seely was his first wife in "plurality," and the first child, Brigham Heber, was the first-born in Mormon polygamy. Since then Brigham's domestic relations have been extended almost indefinitely, with his plural, proxy and sealed wives. But Amelia Folsom was the favorite wife of his old age. She was born in Portsmouth, N. H., is tall and well formed, with light hair, gray eyes, and regular features, but is pale and delicate in appearance. On her Brigham delighted to squander his money. He passed much of his time in her society, and she occupied his death a queenly position among the Saints. Amelia was married to Brigham Young on the 29th of January 1863. In all, Brigham Young is credited with having been married or sealed to forty wives, and the majority of whom he never visited in his late years, and who lived, with their children, a life of drudgery, impetuosity and misery.

In appearance, Brigham Young resembled a New England farmer, as he originally was. He was of rather large figure, broad-shouldered, and stooping slightly when in a standing position; hair light in color, somewhat narrow forehead; gray eyes (the lid of one drooping), fleshy cheeks, imperfect teeth, especially in the lower jaw; rather sharp pointed nose, peaked chin, and generally somewhat irregular features; and yet, both his friends and his enemies agree in saying that his appearance was agreeable and impressive. In conversation he was pleasant and affable unless rendered suspicious or encountering contradiction or opposition. Illiterate, yet not without talent; fluent in speech, and will without the first elements of the genius of an orator, he held his listeners easily, combining in his preaching a forcible pretension to heavenly revelation with a thorough knowledge of the willing subservience of one part of his audience and the fervid superstition of the remainder. Selfish, sensuous, and avaricious. Brigham Young could be and often was audaciously cruel; frequently betraying the spirit of a murderer, even if not following his brutal example.

The important query now is, who will succeed Brigham Young? By the law of the Mormon Church, Heber Chase

Kimball should become President. But the office of President is purely secular. The spiritual headship—the high position of Prophet, Seer, Revelator—will be the great bone of contention. It has been often stated that Brigham Young would reveal to the Saints of Utah by will the person to succeed him. Again, it is claimed that his successor will be appointed by special divine revelation after Brigham's death. The probabilities of succession will lie between Joseph Young, the eldest son of Brigham, and David, the second and posthumous son of Joseph Smith, Joe Smith's eldest son being a schismatic. While there is a large body of supporters of the dynasty of Brigham Young, the dynasty of the first prophet and founder of the Mormon religion, a very great and enthusiastic adherence.

Five Years Suffered Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Legs, and Drooping in Throat Disappear.
Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.
Dear Sir,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 57 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit. I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, so a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual drooping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,
T. J. B. HARDING.

THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

1st Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

2nd This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs, and Droppings in Throat Disappeared.
ST. ASHMAN, P. Q. Sept. 12, 1876.

MR. T. J. B. HARDING.
Pain Run.—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your Constitutional Catarrh Remedy, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 39 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit, but continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a feeling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual droppings in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy, one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and after taking four bottles I was restored to health, so as to be able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,
HENRY SMITH

The 'Bewitched' F

IN TWO CHAPTERS

CHAPTER I.—THE MYSTERIOUS
TIONS.

If anybody should find the interesting story hard to read, I shall let the reproach down to credit of our modern novelists, fast educating the public into underrating of reality. They occurrences wonderfully inferness and in spirit to actual eve-still, by the superstitious sur-printers's types, impose them on readers as daring conceptions. sult is, that if one relates a bit of its superiority to fiction becomes back, and actual occurrences are lieved because they so exceed the of what the slow wits can im-will endeavor, as far as I know to keep this astonishing narra-to level of ordinary romance, but many instances where it may in-rise above these limits, the reader to make an effort.

Big Tom Treddock was—now, many years ago—my school comrade and when we separated at the that institution, it was with a understanding that it was his destiny to enter the army, with a view of becoming a field marshal in an unusually short period of time; but strange to say,
I, instead, married a second cousin and subsequently settled down in one of the term counties at a place called I Grange, and there began my practising gentleman-farming on a large scale. He had often written pressing invitations to visit him frequently; and by way, I suppose, of temptation, greatly occupied his epistles with exciting accounts of plentifulness of game, which I slightly inconsistent with the descriptions given of heavy crops.
He had become an enthusiast on subject of artificial composts, and was less sinking a mint of money in ploughs, I knew he would also likewise for seeing a prize on so, possibly, there was a chance of a shot or two after all. Besides little curious to know how Tom settled down into married life, gone with him in bygone years.

Big Tom Treddock was—no many years ago—my school mate and when we separated at that institution, it was with a understanding that it was his destiny to enter the army, with a view of field marshal in an unusually short time; but strange to say I instead, married a second cousin, subsequently settled down in one term counties at a place called Grange, and there obtained a practising gentleman-farmer on a large scale. He had often pressing invitations to visit his farm; and by way, I suppose, temptation, greatly occupied epistles with exciting accounts of plentifulness of game, which slightly inconsistent with the descriptions given of heavy crops he had become an enthusiast of object of artificial composts, and less sinking a mint of money ploughs, I knew he would also like for seeing a partridge on so, possibly, there was a chance a shot or two after all. Beside little curious to know how Treddock settled down into married life gone with him in bygone years dentist's, and learned from his tortions what it was to have tea when sham-pooing was first, I had witnessed his heroic resist the awful hands of the operator in a word, profited by his various ways, for he was two senior; why, then, should I in what change the martial state ed upon him? I wrote, in answer last invitation, saying that I look out for me at the village station on the following Thursday 11:25 a. m. train. That letter was the Monday preceding which, I left plenty of time for a line for reply. No note, however, came did not attach much importance for I knew that when he really to visit him he meant it; and a not at all a formal kind of pe idea of as-cending to any proposition might never have occurred I also had a slight prior acquaintance with his wife, and I did not at any difficulty had arisen in the Thursday morning accordingly leaving town in an early train, I Red Hill station, including a conviction in my mind, as we along, that Tom Treddock's red face would be about the first should see on the platform. Sweet "Sabbath" Bells.

How sweetly sounds those Sabbath Bells,
When all things else are calm and still:
Their music future bliss foretells,
While thoughts of Heaven our bosoms fill—
Sweet Sabbath Bells!

All Nature with repose seems blest,
The river hath noiseless sweep;
The very clouds appear to rest,
As on the hills their shadows sleep—
Sweet Sabbath Bells!

Who would such blissful rest forego,
To plunge in giddy Joy's excess?
The more of life like this we know,
We love Time's noisy whirl the less—
Sweet Sabbath Bells!

Earth's transient pleasures may decay,
While Passion hath unbounded sway;
But years will all their charms destroy,
And more endear the Holy Day—
Sweet Sabbath Bells!

IN TWO CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.—THE MYSTERIOUS DEPREDA-TIONS.*

If anybody should find the incidents of the following story hard to believe, I shall set the reproach down to the discredit of our modern novelists, who are fast educating the public into a foolish underrating of reality. They imagine occurrences wonderfully infer or in boldness and in spirit to actual events; and still, by the superstition surrounding printers' types, impose them upon dull readers as during conception. The result is, that if one relates a bit of real life, its superiority to fiction becomes a drawback, and actual occurrences are disbelieved because they so exceed the utmost of what the slow wits can imagine. I will endeavor, as far as I honestly can, to keep this astonishing narrative down to level of ordinary romance, but in the many instances where it may necessarily rise above these limits, the reader ought to make an effort.

Big Tom Treddock was, now, alas, too many years ago—my school companion; and when we separated at the gates of that institution, it was with a mutual understanding that it was his destiny to enter the army, with a view of becoming a field marshal in an unusually short period of time; but strange to say, he had, instead, married a second-hand, and subsequently settled down in one of the eastern counties at a place called Red Hill Grange, and there, to amuse himself, practising gentleman farming on a rather large scale. He had often written me pressing invitations to visit him at his farm; and by way, I suppose, of special temptation, greatly occupied his lively epistles with exciting accounts of the plentifulness of game, which I thought slightly inconsistent with the other descriptions given of heavy crops. But if he had become an entire sinner on the subject of artificial composition, and was recklessly sinking a mint of money in team ploughs, I knew he would also retain a should be brought up by the porter the minute that subordinate returned from doing some previous errand; and he added, that he hoped the lad would bring back better news from the Grange. This curious intelligence naturally not a little excited me, and I hurried along the path, which led me through well cultivated fields for some three-quarters of a mile before I gained the top of the hill where the stacks stood in a cluster, as yet, I could now see, quite intact from the incendiary's torch. The large red brick, many-gabled house then came in sight just below me, and I had merely to cross a yard, skirted by the out-buildings to gain it.

"Three more killed, Nell, and the old ewe is one of them. John has just carted 'em up from the bottom meadow." These were the first ominous words I heard on entering the yard; but angry as were the tones, I recognized in them my old friend's cheery voice.

Turning the angle of a barn, I came upon a little group, the central figure of which was Tom Treddock, broad and burly, looking in his plain homely clothes the very picture of a British agriculturist. At his side stood a rather short and somewhat stout young lady, whom I instantly identified as Mrs. Ellen Treddock; and around them, in different attitudes of amazement, bent a laboring-man, a boy, and a servant woman. They were all too intently gazing in one direction, under a kind of cart-shed; to notice me; and as I approached unobserved from behind, I saw that they were, in wondering fascination, contemplating the carcasses of three sheep lying in a row under the shed.

"It's just the same sort o' a blow, right at the back o' the neck, as t'others got," said a second laboring man, whom I now noticed standing beside the dead sheep, occupied just then in roughly wiping his red-stained fingers among the wool, after examining the carcasses in the region of the head.

"Is more of this villany going on?" I inquired, nearing the group.

"Is it you? I am ashamed nobody met you!" were good Tom Treddock's first words, gripping my hand as in a vice, and smiling oddly through his anger and vexation.

"I am so sorry you find us in this state. You must forgive us, Mr. Newcome," exclaimed his wife, whose eyes I could see were red with crying; and then, dashing away the tears, she gave me a greeting almost as hearty as her husband's, though a hysterical sob diversified it here and there.

"Come along into the house," interrupted Treddock, seizing my arm—"Never mind this now," he added, glancing at his wife; and then he went on, turning to the servants: "Go down to the village, and tell the butcher there are three more for him to fetch. That's all. We shall catch the scamp some time."

"You spoke as if you had heard something about it," added Mrs. Treddock, coming round to me, and recollecting, as

Death of Capt. Semmes, The Hero of the Alabama.

A telegram from Mobile announces the death of Captain Raphael Semmes at Point Clear, Ala., at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Captain Semmes is best known as the commander of the Confederate privateer Alabama, which after a long period of successful operation, was finally sunk off the French coast by the Kearsage, under command of Captain Winslow, of the United States Navy. Captain Semmes was born in Charles County Md., Sept. 27, 1809. He entered the United States Navy as a midshipman in 1826, was detailed to the Lexington in 1828, became a lieutenant in 1837, and rose by successive steps to the rank of commander in 1855. While waiting orders in 1834 he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Cumberland County, Md. During the Mexican war he served both at sea and on shore as an aid to Gen. Worth. In 1858 he was appointed Secretary of the Light-House Board, which position he held at the breaking out of the civil war, when he resigned it and joined the Confederates. He was appointed to the command of the war-steamer Sumpter, at New Orleans. With this vessel he ran the blockade at the mouth of the Mississippi, and during the month of July, 1861, captured several Federal merchantmen in the Gulf of Mexico. He went to Southampton subsequently, where for some time he was watched by the United States steamer Tuscarora, and when finally he put to sea the Tuscarora, although detained by the British authorities for a period of thirty-four hours, followed him to the Straits of Gibraltar, and blockade him so closely in the port of Tangier that he sold his vessel and returned privately to England. Here in August, 1862, he was ordered by the Confederate Government to the command of No. "220," which became famous subsequently as the Alabama known and dreaded of the whole United States mercantile marine. This vessel was built for him at Birkenhead, and was manned by an English crew. With her he roamed the seas, doing an infinite deal of mischief for a very long time. January 11, 1863, he encountered the United States gun-boat. Hatteras, off Galveston, Tex., and sank her after a short action. June 19th, 1864, he "met his fate" in the Kearsage, commanded by Captain Winslow, nine miles off the harbor of Cherbourg. The Alabama had been for some time in Cherbourg, undergoing repairs, and on passing out was obliged to encounter the Kearsage. A French man-of-war followed the Alabama to prevent any infraction of international law. The fight between the two vessels was short. The commander of the Kearsage had taken the precaution to overhang the bulwarks with iron chains, from which the shot of the Alabama rebounded, doing little damage. In little more than an hour the Confederate cruiser was completely disabled. Although Captain Semmes endeavored strenuously credit of our modern novelists, who are fast educating the public into a foolish underrating of reality. They imagine occurrences wonderfully inferior in boldness and in spirit to actual events; and still, by the superstition surrounding printers' types, impose them upon dull readers as daring conceptions. The result is, that if one relates a bit of real life, its superiority to fiction becomes a drawback, and actual occurrences are disbelieved because they so exceed the utmost of what the slow wits can imagine. I will endeavor, as far as I honestly can, to keep this astonishing narrative down to level of ordinary romance, but in the many instances where it may necessarily rise above these limits, the reader ought to make an effort.

Big Tom Treddock was—now, alas, too many years ago—my school companion; and when we separated at the gates of that institution, it was with a mutual understanding that it was his destiny to enter the army, with a view of becoming a field marshal in an unusually short period of time; but strange to say, he had, instead, married a second cousin, and subsequently settled down in one of the eastern counties at a place called Red Hill Grange, and there betaken himself to practising gentleman-farming on a rather large scale. He had often written me pressing invitations to visit him at his farm; and by way, I suppose, of special temptation, greatly occupied his lively epistles with exciting accounts of the plentifulness of game, which I thought slightly inconsistent with the other descriptions given of heavy crops. But if he had become an enthusiast on the subject of artificial composts, and was recklessly sinking a mint of money in steam ploughs, I knew he would also retain a liking for seeing a partridge on the wing; so, possibly, there was a chance of getting a shot or two after all. Besides, I was a little curious to know how Treddock had settled down into married life. I had gone with him in bygone years, to the dentist's, and learned from his facial contortions what it was to have teeth drawn; when shampooing was first introduced, I had witnessed his heroic resignation in the awful hands of the operator; I had, in a word, profited by his example in various ways, for he was two years my senior; why, then, should I not behold what change the marital state had worked upon him? I wrote, in answer to his last invitation, saying that he, might look out for me at the village railway station on the following Thursday, by the 11:25 a.m. train. That letter was sent on the Monday preceding, which, of course, left plenty of time for a line from him in reply. No note, however, came. But I did not attach much importance to that, for I knew that when he really asked me to visit him he meant it; and as he was not at all a formal kind of person, the idea of ascertaining to my proposed arrangement might never have occurred to him. I also had a slight prior acquaintance with his wife, and I did not think that any difficulty had arisen in that quarter. Thursday morning accordingly found me leaving town in an early train, booked for Red Hill station, indulging a pleasant conviction in my mind, as we whirled along, that Tom Treddock's handsome red face would be about the first sight I should see on the platform. But a second disappointment awaited me, for on alighting on the little country station to which, it seemed, I was the only passenger, I neither found my friend or any one representing him.

"O yes," said the dapper station-master, lowering the telegraph signal as the whizzing train got into motion; he knew Mr. Treddock very well. I meant Mr. Treddock at the Grange, for they had but one gentleman of that name; and he and all the rest about there wished there were more like him. At least, everybody did but some confounded rascal who had taken a spite against him for nothing; but it was to be hoped it would soon be found out who the villain was."

I asked for an explanation—what this latter rather mysterious statement meant.

"For the last three or four days," answered my companion, carefully wrapped; and around them, in different attitudes of amazement, bent a laboring-man, a boy, and a servant-woman. They were all too intently gazing in one direction, under a kind of eart-shed; to notice me; and as I approached unobserved from behind, I saw that they were, in wondering fascination, contemplating the carcasses of three sheep lying in a row under the shed.

"It's just the same soart o' a blow, reight at the back o' the neck, as t'others got," said a second laboring man, whom I now noticed standing beside the dead sheep, occupied just then in roughly wiping his redly-stained fingers among the wool, after examining the carcasses in the region of the head.

"Is more of this villainy going on?" I inquired, nearing the group.

"Is it you? I am ashamed nobody met you!" were good Tom Treddock's first words, gripping my hand as in a vice, and smiling oddly through his anger and vexation.

"I am so sorry you find us in this state. You must forgive us, Mr. Newcome," exclaimed his wife, whose eyes I could see were red with crying; and then, dashing away the tears, she gave me a greeting almost as hearty as her husband's, though a hysterical sob diversified it here and there.

"Come along into the house," interrupted Treddock, seizing my arm—"Never mind this now," he added, glancing at his wife; and then he went on, turning to the servants:—"Go down to the village, and tell the butcher there are three more for him to fetch. That's all. We shall catch the scamp some time."

"You spoke as if you had heard something about it," added Mrs. Treddock, coming round to me, and recollecting, as it seemed, my first words.

"It isn't worth bothering about, now he is come," said Tom; "and you know," he continued, again grasping my hand, to leave no doubt of the welcome, "we are very glad to see you, though I was not at the station."

"But we shall have to tell Mr. Newcome all about it, to explain why you didn't write back, and why there was not anybody at the station," persisted his wife before I could answer.

"That's true. Why the fact is," went on Tom, coming to a pause in the middle of the yard, "we were not expecting you. I know you won't be offended when you understand it. Nelly thought if I didn't write back, you wouldn't start."

"Yes, but there was a reason for it," hurriedly put in the lady. "That sounds, Tom, as if I did not wish for the visit, which you know I did. It was only because things turned out so after you sent that letter; and I thought," addressing me, "you would not enjoy yourself as we could wish;" and she wound up with a hospitable blush.

"Just so; there is the point," said Treddock; "but we must laugh at it, Nelly. We shan't be ruined yet; and my old friend here must think anything that happens is a joke;" and the big, honest fellow pretended to laugh. "We mustn't be in the blues, old chap, now you are come," and he slapped me on the shoulder. "You won't mind going in by the short way, through the kitchen," he said, making for the back-door.

"I know about it, I at length got out in answer to Mrs. Treddock's long-ago question, as we entered the house: 'The man at the railway station told me, so I understand a great deal too well why you were not there to meet me. Have you had an accident with the window?' I involuntarily asked, for at the end of the low, old-fashioned passage we had just entered from the kitchen, a large case-ment was partially hanging inwards, most of the panes in it shivered.

"On, it is only one of these jokes that somebody is playing us. It smashed in just after six this morning, before it was well light;" and Treddock sent flying some of the fragments of glass from underfoot with a kick, as he laughed again.

"But is it not shameful, when we have not injured a soul, and would not hurt a hair of anybody's head?" asked his wife, who woman like, could not so easily do without sympathy.

the mouth of the Mississippi, and during the month of July, 1861, captured several Federal merchantmen in the Gulf of Mexico. He went to Southampton subsequently, where for some time he was watched by the United States steamer Tuscarora, and when finally he put to sea the Tuscarora, although detained by the British authorities for a period of thirty-four hours, followed him to the Straits of Gibraltar, and blockade him so closely in the port of Tangier that he sold his vessel and returned privately to England. Here in August, 1862, he was ordered by the Confederate Government to the command of No. "220," which became famous subsequently as the Alabama known and dreaded of the whole United States mercantile marine. This vessel was built for him at Birkenhead, and was manned by an English crew. With her he roamed the seas, doing an infinite deal of mischief for a very long time. January 11, 1863, he encountered the United States gun-boat, Hatteras, off Galveston, Tex., and sank her after a short action. June 19th, 1864, he "met his fate" in the Kearsage, commanded by Captain Winslow, nine miles off the harbor of Cherbourg. The Alabama had been for some time in Cherbourg, undergoing repairs, and on passing out was obliged to encounter the Kearsage. A French man-of-war followed the Alabama to prevent any infraction of international law. The fight between the two vessel was short. The commander of the Kearsage had taken the precaution to overhang the bulwarks with iron chains, from which the shot of the Alabama rebounded, doing little damage. In little more than an hour the Confederate cruiser was completely disabled. Although Captain Semmes endeavored strenuously to reach the French coast, the attempt was unsuccessful and the vessel sank. Her commander, thirteen of his officers and some of his sailors were picked up by the English steam-yacht Deerhound, which had accompanied the Alabama from Cherbourg in order to be a spectator of the fight, and this vessel conveyed them in safety to England. Captain Semmes succeeded after some difficulty in making his way back to the Southern States, but the effectual blockade of the Southern ports deprived him of further opportunities of continuing his adventurous career. He wrote the "Cruise of the Alabama and Sumter" and the "Log of the Alabama," which were published in London in 1864. At the close of the war Captain Semmes began to practice law in Mobile. He was arrested and taken to Washington in 1865, but was set free after four months' imprisonment. Since then he has occupied himself in many ways, delivering lectures throughout the South upon his exploits, and making one or two unsuccessful ventures in politics. He began writing early in his career, and the following books attest his industry in this direction. "Service Afloat and Ashore During the Mexican War" (1851); "Campaign of General Scott in the Valley of Mexico" (1852); "The Cruise of the Alabama and the Sumter" (London and New York, 1864); and "Memoirs of Service Afloat During the War Between the States" (Baltimore, 1869.) He attained the rank of Admiral in the Confederate service, but his course after the war did not increase his popularity in the Southern States.

Another Swim Across the British Channel.

Mr. Cavill, who last year unsuccessfully attempted to swim from Dover to Calais, started on Aug. 21 on another expedition of the same kind. This time he proposed to swim from Cape Griznez to England. He started from Cape Griznez at 3:40 P. M. Telegrams from Dover announce that the attempt has been successful. A Central News despatch says:—When Cavill started it was low tide, the wind was southwest, and there was a decided bubble on the sea, although the water was not broken. Cavill set off with a powerful side stroke, and made his way through the water a great rate. He was accompanied for some distance by a boat containing the "Superintendent of the Coastguard."

I asked for an explanation—what this latter rather mysterious statement meant.

"For the last three or four days," answered my companion, carefully wrapping up a signal-flag he held in his hand, "all kind of damage has been about the farm, and they can't find out who it is does it. They keep a good watch, but it's of no use; somehow, they can't light on the rascal. Very likely," he added, "that is the reason Mr. Treddock hasn't come down to the station to meet you, if he was expecting you."

"No doubt that was the reason," I said; "and very sorry I was to hear it; for I felt sure my friend had done nothing to merit treatment of that kind."

"It was quite the other way," the station-master replied; and he went on to give Treddock a most eulogistic character as he walked along by my side, kindly insisting on accompanying me past a certain turn in the road, from whence, he said, I could see the stacks belonging to the Grange on the crest of the hill. By and by, they came into view, and I protested against my companion going any further.

"I only hope the ricks won't be fired," he remarked pointing in the direction of the white hillocks on the distant ridge; "that is the dodge which farmers' enemies generally try. It's so easy; just a match struck and put into the straw; and there isn't over much water at the Grange. I look for 'em the first thing every morning when I get up," he said dolefully, taking a fresh stare from under his raised hand in the direction of the stacks.

"Why, there is smoke!" I cried, quite alarmed, as a thin spiral of vapour went up, the light sky behind showing it plainly.

"That isn't from a stack bless you. It doesn't go up in a curl like that; it is a cloud and a blaze in a minute, when the straw is once alight, especially oats. I've seen it twice—once at Dimmock's, and again at the Firs. That smoke is from one of the house chimneys, so you'll be sure not to miss the way. I have a luggage train due at 11:40, or I would have gone on as far as the bridge, because I am sure Mr. Treddock would have come down but for some reason."

I and the gossiping station-master then parted, he assuring me that my luggage

Queen Victoria's Wealth.

What Queen Victoria leaves behind her will never be known, because the wills of sovereigns are not proved, but those who have carefully considered the subject are of opinion that she must, since the Prince Consort's death, have saved at the very least £100,000 a year. Not only has she lived so quietly that a large proportion of her £385,000 a year public income must be saved, but it is to be remembered that Mr. Nield left her £500,000 which, at four per cent., would give £20,000 a year, and she received £43,000 from her Duchy of Lancaster. The crown lands, given up to the country in lieu of a parliamentary annual grant, have of late years been so ably and economically managed that their revenue covers the royal allowance, and these Crown lands were as much the property of the Sovereign as the lands of the Duke of Devonshire, or any other land holder, are his. If the country chooses to make the most of these lands by cutting up, say, the New Forest, and selling it in lots, and adopting a similar plan with other outlying possessions of the Crown, it would make money out of the royal family. The revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall has risen from £22,000 in 1824 to £75,000, and increased annually about £8,000 so that the next Prince of Wales will probably be independent of a parliamentary grant. Queen Victoria is probably saving with the view of rendering her family as independent as the wealth of the Duke de Penthièvre rendered the house of Orleans, and made Louis Philippe, in consequence, the cheapest of French Kings.

Another Swim Across the British Channel.

Mr. Cavill, who last year unsuccessfully attempted to swim from Dover to Calais, started on Aug. 21 on another expedition of the same kind. This time he proposed to swim from Cape Griznez to England. He started from Cape Griznez at 3:40 P. M. Telegrams from Dover announce that the attempt has been successful. A Central News despatch says:—When Cavill started it was low tide, the wind was southwest, and there was a decided bubble on the sea, although the water was not broken. Cavill set off with a powerful side stroke, and made his way through the water a great rate. He was accompanied for some distance by a boat containing the Superintendent of the Griznez Lighthouse. At starting he wore a sort of water-proof head-dress, especially made to shield his head from the sun, as in his attempt to swim the Channel last year he suffered terribly from the heat. There being not much sun yesterday the head-dress was soon discarded. Cavill calculated that the tides would take him out in a straight line for about 5 miles, and then almost in a straight line to the English coast at or near Dover. At 5 o'clock he took some coffee, and three-quarters of an hour later some beef tea. These were the chief refreshments he took throughout the swim. At seven some cocoa was administered to him. The sea had now become calmer, but a few minutes later the rain came down in torrents and a heavy storm raging over the French coast, the lightning and thunder being very severe. At 8 o'clock Cavill took some more refreshments, an egg being put in the cocoa. For the next two hours nothing occurred save giving refreshments at intervals. At 10½ the sky was clear again. Cavill being asked at this time how he felt, said, "I am cold but feel strong." He continued to struggle on, getting nearer and nearer to the coast. At about 3¼ a. m., twelve hours after he started, he arrived to within fifty yards of the shore, a mile to the north of the lighthouse. The sea had become considerably rougher, and the boatmen were unwilling to pull their boat ashore at this spot. It was considered unsafe for Cavill to get on the shore by himself, owing to the breakers. Accordingly he was taken out of the water, and rubbed down and covered with wraps. To all appearances he was not so much distressed as when he left the water after his attempt last year. His voice was almost as strong as usual. Soon after he had left the water it became very rough, and the waves dashed over the lugger, drenching to the skin those on board. On landing at Dover Harbor, Cavill was heartily cheered, and after a short rest he appeared none the worse for his exertions.

Death of Capt. Semmes, The Hero of the Alabama.

A telegram from Mobile announces the death of Captain Raphael Semmes at Point Clear, Ala., at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. Captain Semmes is best known as the commander of the Confederate privateer Alabama, which after a long period of successful operation, was finally sunk off the French coast by the Kearsarge, under command of Captain Winslow, of the United States Navy. Captain Semmes was born in Charles County Md., Sept. 27, 1809. He entered the United States Navy as a midshipman in 1826, was detailed to the Lexington in 1826, became a lieutenant in 1837, and rose by successive steps to the rank of commander in 1855. While waiting orders in 1854 he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in Cumberland County, Md. During the Mexican war he served both at sea and on shore as an aid to Gen. Worth. In 1858 he was appointed Secretary of the Light-House Board, which position he held at the breaking out of the civil war, when he resigned it and joined the Confederates. He was appointed to the command of the war-steamer Sumpter, at New Orleans. With this vessel he ran the blockade at the mouth of the Mississippi, and during the month of July, 1861, captured several Federal merchantmen in the Gulf of Mexico. He went to Southampton subsequently, where for some time he was watched by the United States steamer Tuscarora, and when finally he put to sea the Tuscarora, although detained by the British authorities for a period of thirty-four hours, followed him to the Straits of Gibraltar, and blockade him so closely in the port of Tangier that he sold his vessel and returned privately to England. January 11, 1863, he encountered the United States gun-boat. Hatteras, off Galveston, Tex., and sank her after a short action. June 19th, 1864, he "met his fate" in the Kearsarge, commanded by Captain Winslow, nine miles off the harbor of Cherbourg. The Alabama had been for some time in Cherbourg, undergoing repairs, and on passing out was obliged to encounter the Kearsarge. A French man-of-war followed the Alabama to prevent any infraction of international law. The fight between the two vessel was short. The commander of the Kearsarge had taken the precaution to overhang the bulwarks with iron chains, from which the shot of the Alabama rebounded, doing little damage. In little more than an hour the Confederate cruiser was completely disabled. Although Captain Semmes endeavored strenuously to reach the French coast, the attempt was unsuccessful, and the vessel sank

American and English Physique.

Mr. Richard Grant White, who has recently been abroad, and who has set down certain of the experiences purchased by his "penny of observation" in an article entitled "English Traits," makes a few affirmations which while contrary to general opinion, accurately accord with her facts as we have seen them. They refer to the comparative physical condition of the English and American people. Mr. White asserts that he has watched crowds of English people at theatres, festivals, churches, and railway stations; that he knows the human physiognomy of all quarters of London, and has walked through country villages and cathedral towns; and, as the result of this wide observation, he declares that "the men and women are generally smaller and less robust than ours, and, above all, the women are, on the whole, sparer and less blooming than ours." He thinks there are more very ruddy people in England, but that delicately-graduated bloom is not very common, while the proportion of people without color in their cheeks is nearly the same as here. Now, we also, unwilling to let a vague impression go for truth in this matter, have stood and purposely watched crowds of people at English railway stations—wherever, indeed, there were gatherings of men and women—and could but feel that, compared with similar assemblages here, the physical difference was but slight. But Mr. White dwells upon another point that we also noted, although the descriptive phrase he uses is his own. He speaks of the superior "set-up" of the men—meaning, of course, their carriage and bearing. This, he tells us, "appears in a marked degree in all military persons, rank and file as well as officers, and in the police force, which are, on the whole, inferior in stature and bulk to ours, but far superior in appearance, owing to the 'set-up' of the men, and the way they carry themselves." This "set up" is not alone, according to our observation, confined to drilled bodies of men. Mr. White must have noticed what a superior body in appearance and carriage, the omnibus drivers and hackmen are to ours. The London omnibus drivers are no such ragged and slovenly vagabonds as those who make unsightly the Broadway stage (by way of compensation, the New York vehicle is much superior.) They are generally well-clothed, often wearing a "high hat," the stamp of respectability in England, and they sit on their boxes with the dignity and upright carriage that here we never see, except on the box of a private carriage. Whether omnibus drivers there are subject to any form of drill or discipline, we cannot say; if not, then they must be animated by greater pride and self-respect than ours are. Similar facts may be observed with English railway-officials, especially with the guards and porters, who are always trim, neat, cleanly "set-up" men, prompt to serve, but always commanding respect. This is not a slight matter. If the habits of American life tend to make Happiness at Home.

It has been said by a philosopher that every cross word uttered or angry feeling experienced, leaves its marring mark on the face. This can be verified by a close observation of the countenances of those around us whose tempers and habits are familiar to us; and its truth thus established. And if the lineaments of the face show traces of such things, how much more must the general, moral and mental system be affected by them? Nothing is more susceptible of proof than the statement that one angry word brings on another, except the good old biblical saying, that "a soft answer turneth away wrath."

Many people really possessed of a sincere desire to do right in all things, allow themselves to fall into the habit of using ungentle and even unkind words to those around them when, if their attention was called to the fact in the right way, they would be astonished at themselves. They mean no harm, but they do harm, both to themselves and to their associates. More especially is this harm perceptible in the family circle, where the developing child is the proud imitator of all the acts of its elders, and particularly those which are pronounced and noticeable. Here is where the carelessly sown seeds of ungentleness are eventually ripened into a harvest of harshness and too often gathered in a crop of vice and crime. Too frequently are these sins of the parents visited upon the children even of the third and fourth generation.

This all results from a lack of full appreciation of the meaning of happiness at home. Happiness is made, not born. It may with reason be argued that it is an impossibility to be happy at home when one is crushed by the cares of life—but difficulties crowding on every side. But that brings us to the very point we are seeking, and leads us to repeat that happiness is made, not born.

The Labor Question in Australia.

Advices from Australia report that the labor question is assuming unusual importance. A few years ago those colonies were offering the strongest inducements to workmen and laborers to leave the old country and settle at the antipodes; while at least one of them, despairing of being able to obtain sufficient white labor organized a costly system of immigration from Polynesia. All this is now changed. It is not merely the Chinese who are warned off. Immigration in general is pronounced an evil against which the colonists are bound to protect themselves. In New South Wales meetings have been held for the purpose of protesting against present "indiscriminate immigration" from Europe and America, and a Working Man's Defence Association has been formed, the main object of which is to discountenance further importations. The agitation against the Chinese appears to be gathering strength. Queensland has the sympathy of South Australia in this resistance to a Mongol invasion, and an attempt will be made to carry through the Adelaide Parliament a measure agreeing in its provisions with the disallowed Aliens Act of the Queensland Legislature. In all the Australian colonies the feeling against the Chinese appears to be strong. The Sydney Morning Herald, for example, urges Queensland to do its utmost to keep out the obnoxious Celestials. The New South Wales paper does not apparently recommend the adoption of such measures as the Aliens Act, but "indirect" means, it urges, might be employed with decisive effect. A bill is about to be introduced into the Brisbane Assembly for the "regulation" of Chinese immigration. It proposes that no ship should carry more than one passenger to each five tons of her registered tonnage, and that the master of every vessel should pay a put to sea the Tuscarora, although detained by the British authorities for a period of thirty-four hours, followed him to the Straits of Gibraltar, and blockade him so closely in the port of Tangier that he sold his vessel and returned privately to England. Here in August, 1862, he was ordered by the Confederate Government to the command of No. "220," which became famous subsequently as the Alabama known and dreaded of the whole United States mercantile marine. This vessel was built for him at Birkenhead, and was manned by an English crew. With her he roamed the seas, doing an infinite deal of mischief for a very long time.

January 11, 1863, he encountered the United States gun-boat. Hatteras, off Galveston, Tex., and sank her after a short action. June 19th, 1864, he "met his fate" in the Kearsage, commanded by Captain Winslow, nine miles off the harbor of Cherbourg. The Alabama had been for some time in Cherbourg, undergoing repairs, and on passing out was obliged to encounter the Kearsage. A French man-of-war followed the Alabama to prevent any infraction of international law. The fight between the two vessel was short. The commander of the Kearsage had taken the precaution to overhang the bulwarks with iron chains, from which the shot of the Alabama rebounded, doing little damage. In little more than an hour the Confederate cruiser was completely disabled. Although Captain Semmes endeavored strenuously to reach the French coast, the attempt was unsuccessful and the vessel sank.
Her commander, thirteen of his officers and some of his sailors were picked up by the English steam-yacht Deerhound, which had accompanied the Alabama from Cherbourg in order to be a spectator of the fight, and this vessel conveyed them in safety to England. Captain Semmes succeeded after some difficulty in making his way back to the Southern States, but the effectual blockade of the Southern ports deprived him of further opportunities of continuing his adventurous career. He wrote the "Cruise of the Alabama and Sumter" and the "Log of the Alabama," which were published in London in 1864. At the close of the war Captain Semmes began to practice law in Mobile. He was arrested and taken to Washington in 1865, but was set free after four months' imprisonment. Since then he has occupied himself in many ways, delivering lectures throughout the South upon his exploits, and making one or two unsuccessful ventures in politics.
He began writing early in his career, and the following books attest his industry in this direction. "Service Afloat and Ashore During the Mexican War" (1851); "Campaign of General Scott in the Valley of Mexico" (1852); "The Cruise of the Alabama and the Sumter" (London and New York, 1864); and "Memoirs of Service Afloat During the War Between the States" (Baltimore, 1869.) He attained the rank of Admiral in the Confederate service, but his course after the war did not increase his popularity in the Southern States.

Another Swim Across the British Channel.

Mr. Cavill, who last year unsuccessfully attempted to swim from Dover to Calais, started on Aug. 21 on another expedition of the same kind. This time he proposed to swim from Cape Griznez to England.
He started from Cape Griznez at 3:40 P.
M. Telegrams from Dover announce that the attempt has been successful. A Central News despatch says:—When Cavill started it was low tide, the wind was southwest, and there was a decided bubble on the sea, although the water was not broken. Cavill set off with a powerful side stroke, and made his way through the water a great rate. He was accompanied for some distance by a boat containing the Superintendent of the Griznez Lighthouse. At starting he wore a sort of water-proof head-dress, especially made to shield his head from the sun, as in his attempt to swim the Channel last year he suffered terribly from the heat. There being not much sun yesterday the head-dress was soon discarded. Cavill calculated that the

although the descriptive phrase he uses is his own. He speaks of the superior "set-their carriage and bearing. This, he tells us, "appears in a marked degree in all on the whole, inferior in stature an ance, owing to the 'set-up' of the men,

"set up" is not alone, according to our observation, confined to drilled bodies of men. Mr White must have noticed what a superior body in appear-the habits of American life tend to make men slothful and negligent, if they encourage the spirit of the loafer and vagabond (and the recent rapid multiplication of tramps would seem to confirm it), it behoves us to look well and see whence may come the remedy, and how to apply

it. The good effect of uniforms in dress upon the morale of men has often been observed. We see, therefore, one way in which, in large bodies of men, the evil mentioned can be partly remedied.
Conductors on city cars, for instance,
just as they are now on the steam lines, might be put in uniform; in all other cases where it is practicable this should be done, as one step toward counteracting a tendency of a very serious nature.—

A Queer Frenzy at Niagara Falls.

M. D. Tooker, Travelling Agent of the Great Western Railway, a resident of Niagara Falls, says there is a curious fact connected with the suicide of Dr. Stein of New York, the old gentleman who sprang last Friday from the Suspension, Foot Bridge, below the Falls, into the bubbling flood below, a distance of 185 feet. Dr. Stein, whose health appeared feeble, and who was no doubt suffering under aberration of the mind, arose quite early Friday morning and engaged a boothblack to show him around and point out objects of interest. He agreed to give the boy a dollar and a half to continue with him during the day, and pulling out a very large roll of bills paid him in advance. When the old gentleman and the boy had reached the middle of the Suspension Bridge, near the Falls, they halted, and after a momentary survey of the great cataracts, Dr. Stein asked if there was any carriage to be seen upon the bridge in either direction.
The boy looked, and answered no.
"Is there any one in sight at any part of the bridge?" inquired the old gentleman.
"There is no one at all," said the boy,
after a sharp look. At the same instant
Dr. Stein seized the boy and endeavored to throw him over the railing of the bridge. The lad screamed and struggled with all the energy he possessed, and by clinging to the timbers defeated the object of his insane companion. Mr.
Tooker considers it wonderful that any sound could be heard above the roar of the Falls. Perhaps the struggles of the man to throw, and of the boy to save himself, caused the bridge to oscillate to a marked degree; at any rate, the attendants of the bridge at each of the shore ends rushed out and made for the rescue. This Dr. Stein perceived, let go of his well-nigh exhausted victim, climb-while at least one of them, despairing of being able to obtain sufficient white labor organized a costly system of immigration from Polynesia. All this is now changed.

It is not merely the Chinese who are ample, urges Queensland to do its utmost to keep out the obnoxious Celestials. The New South Wales paper does not apparently recommend the adoption of such measures as the Aliens Act, but "indirect" with decisive effect. A bill is about to be introduced into the Brisbane Assembly tion. It proposes that no ship should the master of every vessel should pay a deposit of £10 for each immigrant, "to be refunded after three years should the immigrant not be convicted of any crime, or not become a charge upon the colony as a pauper." Our Sidney contemporary thinks this "might be found stringent enough to answer any purpose"—an opinion which no one will be likely to dispute.

Popularity of Murderers in Naples.

It is usual in this country to throw flowers and confetti over the bride as she leaves the church. During the last week the honor has been extended to a mur-derer on his own confession, and a few details will show how little morality, law and authority are respected in the South.
In a street quarrel, in which women were engaged, the man called Esposito interfered in behalf of his mother, but being a matteis subject and an "ammonito," he was threatened by a police agent, Borrelli, with being "proposed" to be sent off to domicilio coatto.

Every attempt was made to divert him from his purpose, but in vain, and then it was that Esposito resolved on murdering him, as, in fact, he did last week.
After his examination he was committed, and on his road to prison he received an ovation. Flowers and confetti were thrown over him, and so large was the crowd of people, among whom were many women, that the soldiers were called out to restore order. Esposito was a camorrista, and was sure, therefore, of popular support. Borrelli, too, whose antecedents have not been very favorable and had lately served as a police spy, had rendered valuable services to justice from the intimate knowledge which he possessed of the class of criminals in Naples. The termination of this scandalous affair, so far as it has gone, was that crowds of thieves and other well-known criminals broke into the room where, according to custom, the body of Borrelli was laid for examination on a marble table, dragged it to the ground, covered it with dirt, and defaced it with every kind of indignity.

While investigating this case, the attention of the Quæstor was called to another in which blood was shed. A young woman not more than twenty years of age thrust a sharp pointed knife into the throat of her lover, who died three hours after. On the crime being reported the Guards ran to arrest the woman, but here again a threatening crowd assembled, and would have defended the woman, who still held the blood-stained knife in her hand. The arrest was, however, at length effected. Murders, it may be said, occur in all countries, but seldom is it that sympathy is shown with the criminal

Another Swim Across the British Channel.

Mr. Cavill, who last year unsuccessfully attempted to swim from Dover to Calais, started on Aug. 21 on another expedition of the same kind. This time he proposed to swim from Cape Grisnez to England. He started from Cape Grisnez at 3:40 P. M. Telegrams from Dover announce that the attempt has been successful. A Central News despatch says:—When Cavill started it was low tide, the wind was southwest, and there was a decided bubble on the sea, although the water was not broken. There being not much sun yesterday the head-dress was soon discarded. Cavill calculated that the tides would take him out in a straight line for about 5 miles, and then almost in a straight line to the English coast at or near Dover. At 5 o'clock he took some coffee, and three-quarters of an hour later some beef tea. These were the chief refreshments he took throughout the swim. At seven some cocoa was administered to him. The sea had now become calmer, but a few minutes later the rain came down in torrents and a heavy storm raging over the French coast, the lightning and thunder being very severe. At 8 o'clock Cavill took some more refreshments, an egg being put in the cocoa. For the next two hours nothing occurred save giving refreshments at intervals. At 10½ the sky was clear again. Cavill being asked at this time how he felt, said, "I am cold but feel strong." He continued to struggle on, getting nearer and nearer to the coast. At about 3¼ a m., twelve hours after he started, he arrived to within fifty yards of the shore, a mile to the north of the lighthouse. The sea had become considerably rougher, and the boatmen were unwilling to pull their boat ashore at this spot. It was considered unsafe for Cavill to get on the shore by himself, owing to the breakers. Accordingly he was taken out of the water, and rubbed down and covered with wraps. To all appearances he was not so much distressed as when he left the water after his attempt last year. His voice was almost as strong as usual. Soon after he had left the water it became very rough, and the waves dashed over the lugger, drenching to the skin those on board. On landing at Dover Harbor, Cavill was heartily cheered, and after a short rest he appeared none the worse for his exertions.

This Dr. Stein perceived, let go of his well-nigh exhausted victim, climbed to the top of the railing, and, without a word, sprang into the misty air, and the unfathomable pool deep down below. In falling he struck one of the bridge girders, which, springing from the concussion, threw the distracted mortal more up stream and changed his attitude from a nearly upright to a prone position. With arms and legs extended as if swimming, he fell flat on the turbulent green-hued waters of the Niagara, and that was the last of him. For, although a thousand dollars reward has been offered for the recovery of the body, and hundreds have looked for it night and day since, not a vestige of it has come to the surface.

A Clerical Joke.

The following story is credited to the Rev. W. J. Hunter:—

At a convention of clergymen held in Hamilton, and, after the evening's meal, it was proposed that each should entertain the company with such remarks as might be deemed appropriate. When it came to the turn of Mr. Hunter he related a dream, which he said he had, a few nights before. In his dream he went to heaven; and his picture of the golden streets, the rivers of shining water: the seraphic choir, and so forth, were extremely interesting.

"When he concluded, Rev. Mr. G—— from Chatham—a man notorious for his money grabbing and close, penurious habits—approached and asked him in a tone of coarse familiarity:

"Well, Brother Hunter, did you see any of us in your dream?"

Yes, Brother G——, I saw you,

Ah! And what was I doing?

You were on your knees.

Of course, praying!

No; you were trying to dig up the golden pavements of the New Jerusalem.

IT IS USUAL in this country to throw flowers and confetti over the bride as she leaves the church. During the last week the honor has been extended to a murderer on his own confession, and a few details will show how little morality, law and authority are respected in the South. In a street quarrel, in which women were engaged, the man called Esposito interfered in behalf of his mother, but being a matutis sujel and an "ammonito," he was threatened by a police agent, Borrelli, with being "proposed" to be sent off to domicilio coatto.

Every attempt was made to divert him from his purpose, but in vain, and then it was that Esposito resolved on murdering him, as, in fact, he did last week. After his examination he was committed, and on his road to prison he received an ovation. Flowers and confetti were thrown over him, and so large was the crowd of people, among whom were many women, that the soldiers were called out to restore order. Esposito was a camorrista, and was sure, therefore, of popular support. Borrelli, too, whose antecedents have not been very favorable and had lately served as a police spy, had rendered valuable services to justice from the intimate knowledge which he possessed of the class of criminals in Naples. The termination of this scandalous affair, so far as it has gone, was that crowds of thieves and other well-known criminals broke into the room where, according to custom, the body of Borrelli was laid for examination on a marble table, dragged it to the ground, covered it with dirt, and defaced it with every kind of indignity.

While investigating this case, the attention of the Questor was called to another in which blood was shed. A young woman not more than twenty years of age thrust a sharp pointed knife into the throat of her lover, who died three hours after. On the crime being reported the Guards ran to arrest the woman, but here again a threatening crowd assembled, and would have defended the woman, who still held the blood-stained knife in her hand. The arrest was, however, at length effected. Murders, it may be said, occur in all countries, but seldom is it that sympathy is shown with the criminal so ostentatiously as it had been shown in the cases I have reported.—London Times' Naples Correspondence.

The Pope's Dry Humor.

Among the many pilgrims who have of late visited Rome was an old French lady who undertook the pilgrimage, according to an Italian paper, under circumstances of no ordinary interest. She had for some time suffered from an affection of the leg so serious a nature that acting under the advice of eminent physicians, she at last consented to have the limb amputated as the only chance of restoration to health. On the day, however, before that on which the operation was to take place, one of her friends persuaded her to defer it until she had tried the effect of a stocking in his possession that had been worn by the Pope, and which he asserted would infallibly cure her. She accordingly put on the stocking, and, to her surprise and delight, at the end of a few days was able to walk about as thoroughly cured as though she had never labored under any infirmity. Having made a vow that if the remedy proved successful she would perform a pilgrimage to Rome, she lost no time in redeeming this pledge, and, on being ushered into the presence of the Pope, prostrated herself with emotion before his Holiness, enthusiastically thanking him for the benefit she had derived from the use of his stocking. After hearing her story, the Pope coldly replied:—"You are most fortunate. One of my stockings has healed you and restored you a leg: As for myself, I put two of them on each morning, yet I am not able to walk or even stand upright on my legs, and am obliged," he added bitterly, "to be wheeled about in a chair."

A DECIDED DIFFERENCE.

(Whigs)

We consent to be reminded of the fact that on several occasions when Reform Ministers of the Crown have addressed public meetings during an election contest, the candidate they supported was not successful. We object, however, that the cases cited are not at all parallel to Lennox. Each of the three constituencies named has a reputation for vacillation. In East Toronto the causes which operated against Mr. O'Donoghue required no renewed publicity. The Tory tactics of denouncing as Fenian sympathisers all who should venture to vote for him, and other equally despicable tricks, went far to affect the result. North Lanark had been oscillating between, not only the two parties, but the two men for some time, and the whim of the electors, who had given the seat to Murry the Reformer by a small majority on the previous occasions, let Peter the Tory have it in his turn. As to South Ontario, it is sufficiently notorious that Mr. Gibbs is, at home, as our contemporary says of Mr. Cartwright, "a hard man to beat." In the surging wave of popular indignation in '74, however, he was swept away with scores of others who had supported Sir John in his great Railway iniquity. By the time that the by-election, consequent on the death of the Hon. Malcolm Cameron, ensued, however, the intensity of the popular excitement had somewhat subsided; the great influence against Mr. Gibbs of his local rival and former supporter, Mr. Glenn, had also been vastly reduced; and to these two adventitious circumstances in his favour the Hon. gentleman owed his last election by a small majority over an almost total stranger to the constituency. How different the case of Lennox. It was always regarded as a strong and perfectly reliable Tory constituency. In fact the boast was made that such was the devotion of it to the Chief-tain that it was only by his grace that Mr. Cartwright was permitted to sit for it, and that Sir John virtually held the political life of the member for Lennox in his hand. As the very mottoes last Tuesday boasted, the people of the county adored the chieftain as their own "adopted son," and delighted in nothing so much as to do him honour. Many were their predictions, therefore, when the member for Lennox became Reform Finance Minister, that he had by that act committed political treason, and that for his base betrayal of the men of Lennox the doom of defeat awaited him. Sir John was engaged by the indignant constituents of the recreant Cartwright the day before the expected event as the political headman to arrange the preliminaries of the execution, and, as we have been told, "was cordially received" on that occasion. To the intense disgust and humiliation of the political Haman and his co-conspirators, the county declared by a more pronounced majority than it had ever recorded for its member before—between eight and nine hundred—that Hon. R. J. Cartwright, and not the Chieftain of Corruption, was the man they delighted to honour. In the teeth of the untrue statement that since his desertion of Sir John the electors of Lennox had "not sympathized" with him, we repeat that this triumph was won by Mr. Cartwright since his accession to the present Government, and within twenty-four hours of his attempted and promised annihilation by Sir John Macdonald. Were anything more required to fill the cup of the Chieftain's humiliation in this matter, it will surely be found in the reflection that the Hon. Mr. Cartwright could double the paltry majority (17) which Sir John with all his known electioneering resources was able to command in this city which he had regarded as inalienably his own for thirty years, and after that have over 800 votes to spare! Surely our

The "So-Called" Pacific Scandal.

CERTAIN SPEECHES AT THE COBBOURG PICNIC SIMPLIFIED.

Hon. Matt. C.: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, you all know I am a moral man; a strictly pure man politically and otherwise. You know, for I have frequently told you, that I am a conscientious person, who would not willingly do or abet anything which was of a questionable character and let me add this profession of purity is not hypocritical as it would be were I a Grit; it is made in sincerity and in truth. With these few prefatory remarks, I wish to say a word on the much talked of Pacific Scandal. Scandal! That is what they call it, and I must confess that legally and technically speaking, scandal is the proper word. As a lawyer, and a somewhat distinguished and esteemed lawyer too, I am obliged to say that the evidence submitted to the court and fully established in connection with the conduct of my right honorable friend John A., in the matter of the Pacific railway charter, quite justifies the use of the word Scandal. Legally speaking it cannot be called a Slander—for that would imply that the charge had never been proved, which, as you are all aware, it unfortunately was. But, sir, while I say all this, I by no means deem it my duty as a pure person, as aforesaid, to join with those who condemn my right honorable friend for his conduct in the premises. As a moralist—a practical moralist—I do not deem it my duty to withdraw my allegiance from him until he expresses contrition for his offence. By no means. Yet, mark you, I do not seek to pronounce him guiltless. But I stand by him, as such pure and moral politician aforesaid, and I ask you, ladies and gentlemen as pure persons to stand by him, on the ground that the Grits are just as bad and have done just as wicked deeds. I have not time just now to point out, but will make way for the right honorable gentleman himself.

Sir John A. Macdonald, K. C. B., P. D. Q. of Spain, &c.—I am not in the habit of making professions of purity. I never was. (Hear, hear!) The Conservative party of Canada never did and does not now make any such house-top professions. (Cheers.) We leave that for the Grits. (Laughter.) My friend Mr. Cameron acts in the capacity of professing purist for the rest of us, and the rest of us feel to do a good deal as we please. (Renewed laughter.) I don't profess to be immaculate. I may have made mistakes, in fact I'm sure I've made mistakes. There was the Washington Treaty about the Fisheries, for example, and the North West Rebellion; and the Northern Railway affair; and the Pacific Scandal. Sir, I beg pardon, I meant to say slander. I am sorry to have to differ with so good and learned a man as Mr. Cameron, but I object to his calling that affair a scandal. Sir, it was a vile calumny got up by the Grits for the purpose of pouring obloquy upon me, Sir, there was not a word of truth in any part of it that imputed corrupt motives to me. (A voice—What about your own evidence before the commission?) I don't care a cent for my own evidence or any other man's. I want to get back to power again and I think that whole Pacific business is far enough out of the public mind now to make it safe for me to put on a cheek of brass and declare as I now do declare, that the whole thing was a fraud and a gross libel on myself and my colleagues. It was a slander, sir Mr. Cameron, ladies and gentlemen, it was an infernal slander! I will call upon my honorable friend, Mr. McDougall, to corroborate these few remarks.

Hon. William.—Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen; It gives me extreme pain to be obliged to differ in opinion from Building Activity in London, En.

A London correspondent writes: "Fortunes are being made at a rate by brickmakers in the neighborhood of London. An immense impetus to building speculation has been imparted by the prolonged depression in general. Money which would have been rather recklessly invested in new property, and London is being sued by a belt of houses run up for the purpose of investing money rather than meeting the legitimate requirement of increased population. The howl of property in the market is not sufficient to satisfy the unprecedented demands of speculators, who are rushing with unanimity to invest the money in land and mortar. The failure of foreign investment at the present time, the field are bought, plotted out, and upon with magic rapidity, and the so run up are tenanted in many cases before they are dry, while the draught generally left to chance. Many ban neighborhoods are being spoiled by the haphazard manner which open spaces are covered by lative buildings, and existing property in many cases severely depreciated. Brickmakers, however, are making immense fortunes out of the present mania activity. The prices for brick average fifty to one hundred per cent over those prevailing only a few years ago. Auctioneers who trade in house property are also abnormally busy, and undertakers in every new neighborhood have almost more business than they can decently can cover."

Brigham Young's Co-operative

A curious feature of Brigham Young's despotism in the huge co-operative erected at Salt Lake City in 1868 cost of $150,000. Through Brigham's influence, or rather command, the stock shares, in sums ranging $100 until the whole capital stock of the institution, amounting to nearly $800,000 was taken up. Branch stores were established in other parts of the territory over the portals of all was placed "Holiness to the Lord." The aim prophet and his partners was to enrich the gentile and apostate merchant and themselves. Orders were issued to Mormons not to buy goods of gentiles or apostates, and these orders were enforced by policemen who were stationed in front of the objectionable stores who turned customers that were a nuisance. At the same time the agencies throughout the territory were forbidden to buy their fabrics and provisions anywhere except at Brigham's co-operative establishment. Its some years amounted to $40,000. Finally the tyranny became unbearable since the Mormons had to pay exorbitant prices, and in time many of them secretly purchased much of what was wanted from gentile and apostate merchants; unbelievers who moved to Utah and of course gave the latter patronage. The dividends of the co-operative store finally fell away, its credit declined, and bankruptcy now stared the face. Brigham induced hundreds of Mormons to deposit their savings in this institution, which has the peculiar feature of holding fast whatever goes in, and expelling nothing. As a gigantic swindle, Brigham was not overshadowed by any other man of this generation.

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, SEPT. 21st, 1877.

THE LATE DEMONSTRATION.

The real political importance to be attached to this meeting, may be best understood by outsiders, from the simple statement, that by far the most conspicuous figure among Sir JOHN's backers from the County of Lennox, was a certain A. H. ROE.

This great man seems by all accounts to have completely eclipsed all lesser local luminaries, and there is no doubt that Mr. ROE, in thus practically presiding at the "great and magnificent" celebration in honour of Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, K. C. B., was emphatically the right man in the right place.

Mr. ROE's claims to this honour are many and various, and such as must have very specially recommended him to the good grace of Sir JOHN.

Like that great man, "wrong both he had from slanderous tongues," and indeed, if we are correctly informed, there are many other points of resemblance in the career of the two friends.

Mr. ROE, we believe, was at one time Reeve of Richmond, and was turned out by an ungrateful constituency, merely for having been the victim of a doubtless "cruel" charge of using the Township funds for his own private purposes.

He was afterwards the hero of two or three bankruptcies of a rather shabby character, and has presided over, or aided in conducting certain speculative financial institutions — well known to the police.

It is true that in spite of these fundamental resemblances, there are minor points of difference between Sir JOHN and Mr. ROE.

For instance, Mr. ROE is very stout, and Sir JOHN is very thin. Mr. ROE is a very prominent teetotaler, and Sir JOHN is — well, not exactly a very prominent advocate of Temperance, by example at least.

Then, which is certainly a serious difference, Sir JOHN has never disorged a ed by a more pronounced majority than it had ever recorded for its member before—between eight and nine hundred—that Hon. R. J. Cartwright, and not the Chiefstain of Corruption, was the man they delighted to honour. In the teeth of the untrue statement that since his desertion of Sir John the electors of Lennox had "not sympathized" with him, we repeat that this triumph was won by Mr. Cartwright since his accession to the present Government, and within twenty-four hours of his attempted and promised annihilation by Sir John Macdonald. Were anything more required to fill the cup of the Chiefstain's humiliation in this matter, it will surely be found in the reflection that the Hon. Mr. Cartwright could double the paltry majority (17) which Sir John with all his known electioneering resources was able to command in this city which he had regarded as inalienably his own for thirty years, and after that have over 800 votes to spare! Surely our Tory friends in these parts will "admit" that there is some little food for reflection in these stubborn facts.

'NO FUTURE.

Sir John A. Macdonald was much concerned at Napanee because there was "no future" for the Hon. Mr. Cartwright. What does he mean? For whom is the "future" being reserved? Not surely for himself. To lay such a fluttering unction to his soul would be the very worst species of self deception. The Tory placard at Cobourg announced, "We want statesmen"—not the coterie of political tricksters and corruptionists that followed right behind the significant motto. Besides, did not Sir John tell 75,000 people, more or less, who called him "Prince" at Montreal, that every dog had his day, and he had had his? Having regard to persons and political parties and the respective prospects ahead of the two men in both these respects, we fancy that "Old Probabilities" would be just as likely to sign a lease of the "future" for Hon. Mr. Cartwright as for Sir John Macdonald. Then too, not only Mr. Cartwright's prospects at least as bright as the Chiefstain's, but the former gentleman has the "present" in the meantime. This is surely some consolation, for a bird in the hand is proverbially worth more than two in the bush.—Whig

A NUT FOR CANADIAN FARMERS TO CRACK.

A VALUABLE EXPORT.

From the 4th July to 14th Sept., 1837 tons leached ashes have been shipped from Napanee by barges and schooners to Brooklyn N. Y. The value thereof being $2,760—about $1.50 per ton. Now if this article can bring this price at our wharves, then shipped over five hundred miles and sold at a profit, it surely should receive attention from our agriculturists, whose lands cannot possibly be so over-productive as not to need a renewal of the elements supplied by this excellent, but almost discarded fertilizer. Our farmers should read the following.

A writer in the American Agriculturist (W. Aswater, of Connecticut), writing of wood ashes, says:—"Many of our best farmers in Connecticut use leached ashes, imported from Canada at a cost of from eighteen to twenty-eight cents or more per bushel, in preference to all other fertilizers except barnyard and stable manure." If New England farmers find it profitable to purchase leached ashes for fertilizers in Canada, and to bear, in addition, the price paid for carriage, are they not worth the cost price to Canadian farmers? Are their lands so exceedingly fertile that they can afford to send away one of the best fertilizers to be obtained in the country for the sake of a few dollars they will receive in exchange? Ashes are not so lightly valued by any other agriculturists as they are here. In Ireland not only is every shovelful of ashes from their turf fires carefully saved as a most valuable fertilizer, but even earth

I object to this calling that affair a scandal. Sir, it was a vile calumny got up by the Grits for the purpose of pouring obloquy upon me. Sir, there was not a word of truth in any part of it that imputed corrupt motives to me. (A voice—What about your own evidence before the commission?) I don't care a cent for my own evidence or any other man's. I want to get back to power again and I think that whole Pacific business is far enough out of the public mind now to make it safe for me to put on a cheek of brass and declare as I now do declare, that the whole thing was a fraud and a gross libel on myself and my colleagues. It was a slander, sir Mr. Cameron, ladies and gentlemen, it was an infernal slander! I will call upon my honorable friend, Mr. McDougall, to corroborate these few remarks.

Hon. William.—Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen! It gives me extreme pain to be obliged to differ in opinion from my trusted and generous leader, Sir John. I call him generous, because on one occasion I knew he threw $8,000,000 into the sea. In fact, I am sorry to say, that on this Pacific Scandal subject, I must differ from both the previous speakers. My own view of it is, that it was neither a slander nor a scandal, but the baseless fabric of a vision. It was a mere fiction, invented in the Globe office. It never did have any foundation in fact. There never was a man named Sir Hugh Allen, who contributed money to a person named Macdonald, because he was a good party man and wanted to help the elections. The whole thing is a myth and one of the clumsy jokes of the Grit party. I would counsel the electorate of the country to act accordingly. Act as if no such thing ever existed. That's the way I do myself, and I can truly say I never felt more happy and comfortable. (Great applause)—Grip.

Canadian Poetry.

It is pleasant to note that amid all the cares and anxieties attendant on a struggle for office the Conservatives still find time to cultivate poetry. Like their principles, their verse is very peculiar. The Essex laureate of the Party took occasion at the demonstration in which the Emperor was exhibited amid blue flames, to get off the following:—

Thou brave Macdonald!
Thy heart ne'er quails,
You have shown their frauds
And the steel rails.

When Sir John is Pilot (Pirate?)
We have no fears,
He has steered us safe
For twenty years.

The Hamilton bard of the party has also in the rubbish column of the organ given forth the following:—

They built a hotel,
Which they knew they could sell,
"With slabs and eulls from Oliver's mills."

The Chief himself rushed into rhyme not long ago in that sweet little poem:

Bone and Skin,
Two statesmen thin,
Would starve the land or near it;
But he it known,
To Skin and Bone,
That flesh and blood won't bear it.

Sir John has also displayed himself in blank verse, as witness this:

From East to West, wherever I have been,
The country is arising, the tocsin
Is sounding. The hearth is on fire. You See it running from hill to hill, and when I was in the Eastern Townships, I heard
The cry echoing from rock to rock—
Cross the bosoms of these beautiful lakes
And over the emerald field, "Come to
"Our rescue, John A., or we are lost."
Rum, tum, tum, ti tididity.

Another of the party poets, catching the inspiration, cries out:

"Brave Sir John, take us in hand,
And save from ruin thy native land."
With a tooral-lie-rooral-lie-rooral-lie-tum.

In earlier years, before the party lost office, the party poetry was more practical; as for instance, that famous hymn of Sir John's:

Send me another ten thousand,
Another thousand ten,
And then another ten thousand,
And yet a thousand ten.

Or,

I know a railway whence the bank notes flow, Still another claims the attention of the poetry-loving public:—

O farmers, listen unto we visions anywhere except at Brigham co-operative establishment. Its some years amounted to $4,000. Finally the tyranny became unbearable since the Mormons had to pay exorbitant prices, and in time many of them secretly purchased much of what they wanted from gentle and apostate merchants; unbelievers who moved Utah and of course gave the latter a patronage. The dividends of the co-operative store finally fell away, its credit declined, and bankruptcy now stares it in the face. Brigham induced hundreds of Mormons to deposit their savings in this institution, which has the peculiarity of holding fast whatever goes into capacious maw. A gigantic swindle! Brigham was not overshadowed by other man of this generation.

Business Prospects.

The business outlook still continues encouraging. Our merchants, however, do not look for excessive business great profits, but there is a general expectation of healthy activity and real gains are compared with the last years. The conservative policy pursued by country buyers for some time past resulted in keeping stocks low, and wholesalers are reaping the benefit of this denial, now that the condition of harvests warrants greater freedom making purchases. It will be well to remember, however, that there is a great deal of indebtedness to be wiped away, and that the amount of interest to be paid will absorb a great part of means through which we must look for restoration to our normal state of prosperity. Wheat promises to maintain fair price, but this is doubtless dependent in a great measure on the continuance of the Russo-Turkish war. I doubt expressed a few weeks ago in column as to the ability of Chicago processors to rule the wheat market of world has since been proved correct. September "bears" are now busy running around the North-West, making an effort to fill their sales in the nineties a month ago. We still maintain wisdom of our advice to farmers to at the reasonable figures offering. Efforts of the bears have sent prices meantime. Money market little changed. A somewhat better demand prevails. Journal of Commerce.

A Spider's Fatal Bite.

A week ago last Thursday morning Martha Cesar, a colored woman of years of age, and wife of James Cesar proprietor of a restaurant in Providence, R. I., was awakened from sleep by a stinging sensation in her under lip, found that she had been bitten by a spider. As the rude cabin in which they live, on Babcock street is infested with numerous spiders, she supposed that of them had crawled upon the bed while she was asleep. During the day her pain increased severely, and at night it was badly swollen, and had turned to a purple color. She applied poultices, such simple remedies, but the swelling increased during Friday and Saturday and the pain extended to her head and limbs. On Sunday Dr. Mathews called and found that the poison had made its way into her system so rapidly that there were but slight hopes of recovery from its malignant effects. However, he prescribed soothing medicines and applied poultices, which reduced the swelling somewhat. On Monday Mrs. Cesar lost the control of her limbs and was obliged to lie down on her back from which she never arose. On Tuesday she gradually became unconscious and her face was swollen beyond recognition, but she was suffering terribly. She died at about 9:40 on Wednesday night.

THE LATE DEMONSTRATION.

The real political importance to be attached to this meeting, may be best understood by outsiders, from the simple statement, that by far the most conspicuous figure among Sir JOHN's backers from the County of Lennox, was a certain A. H. ROE.

This great man seems by all accounts to have completely eclipsed all lesser local luminaries, and there is no doubt that Mr. ROE, in thus practically presiding at the "great and magnificent" celebration in honour of Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, K. C. B., was emphatically the right man in the right place.

Mr. ROE's claims to this honour are many and various, and such as must have very specially recommended him to the good grace of Sir JOHN.

Like that great man, "wrong hath he had from slanderous tongues," and indeed, if we are correctly informed, there are many other points of resemblance in the career of the two friends.

Mr. ROE, we believe, was at one time Reeve of Richmond, and was turned out by an ungrateful constituency, merely for having been the victim of a doubtless "crnel" charge of using the Township funds for his own private purposes.

He was afterwards the hero of two or three bankruptcies of a rather shabby character, and has presided over, or aided in conducting certain speculative financial institutions — well known to the police.

It is true that in spite of these fundamental resemblances, there are minor points of difference between Sir JOHN and Mr. ROE.

For instance, Mr. ROE is very stout, and Sir JOHN is very thin. Mr. ROE is a very prominent teetotaler, and Sir JOHN is — well, not exactly a very prominent advocate of Temperance, by example at least.

Then, which is certainly a serious difference, Sir JOHN has never disgorged a cent of the public funds he appropriated, while Mr. ROE it is said, did make restitution to the Township Treasury, though it may be very fairly argued in his behalf, that if so he only did it for the same reason, that Sir JOHN resigned because he really could not help himself.

For the rest, we understand that Mr. ROE is ambitious of becoming an ornament of the Canadian Bar — like Sir JOHN — and meantime, that he pleads with much energy in the Division Courts, of Lennox and Addington — as Sir JOHN says he used to do. Really, we do not see what there is to prevent Mr. ROE, from ripening in time into a second Sir JOHN, and we heartily congratulate the Liberal Conservative Association of Lennox and Addington on the fine perception, they have shown, of the natural fitness of things, in selecting A. H. ROE, as the very properest person in all Lennox to welcome Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD thereto.

"ARCODES AMBO."

species or self deception. The story placard at C'bourg announced, "We want statesmen" — not the coterie of political tricksters and corruptionists that followed right behind the significant motto. Besides, did not Sir John tell 75,000 people, more or less, who called him "Prince" at Montreal, that every dog had his day, and he had had his? Having regard to persons and political parties and the respective prospects ahead of the two men in both these respects, we fancy that "Old Probabilities" would be just as likely to sign a lease of the "future" for Hon. Mr. Cartwright as for Sir John Macdonald. Then too, not only Mr. Cartwright's prospects at least as bright as the Chieftain's, but the former gentleman has the "present" in the meantime. This is surely some consolation, for a bird in the hand is proverbially worth more than two in the bush. — Whig

A NUT FOR CANADIAN FARMERS TO CRACK.

A VALUABLE EXPORT.

From the 4th July to 14th Sept., 1877 tons leached ashes have been shipped from Napanee by barges and schooners to Brooklyn N. Y. The value thereof being $2,760 — about $1.50 per ton. Now if this article can bring this price at our wharves, then shipped over five hundred miles and sold at a profit, it surely should receive attention from our agriculturists, whose lands cannot possibly be so over-productive as not to need a renewal of the elements supplied by this excellent, but almost discarded fertilizer. Our farmers should read the following.

A writer in the American Agriculturist (W. Aswater, of Connecticut), writing of wood ashes, says: — "Many of our best farmers in Connecticut use leached ashes, imported from Canada at a cost of from eighteen to twenty-eight cents or more per bushel, in preference to all other fertilizers except barnyard and stable manure." If New England farmers find it profitable to purchase leached ashes for fertilizers in Canada, and to bear, in addition, the price paid for carriage, are they not worth the cost price to Canadian farmers? Are their lands so exceedingly fertile that they can afford to send away one of the best fertilizers to be obtained in the country for the sake of a few dollars they will receive in exchange? Ashes are not so lightly valued by any other agriculturists as they are here. In Ireland not only is every shovelful of ashes from their turf fires carefully saved as a most valuable fertilizer, but even earth ferns and headlands are burned in large ash-fires to obtain the ashes for manure; and these ashes are not equal for the purpose to wood ashes.

We know from experience that ashes is a fertilizer of great value to all our farm and garden crops. We have used it on the growing cereals and root crops, and in all cases with advantage. To the potato crop we have found it especially beneficial, and as a top-dressing for lawns and meadows. All who have had much practical knowledge of the benefits to crops generally will fully agree that the analyses by chemists do not rate constituent elements more highly than is borne out by experience. From analyses by Prof. Johnson on others the average percentages of plant food are from forty-seven to fifty pounds per one hundred pounds weight of wood ashes. A dressing of fifty pounds of unleached ashes to the acre would give 200 bushels of potato, 768 pounds of lime, 120 pounds of magnesia, 49 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 7 pounds of sulphuric acid (W. G. A.). Can it be that the farms of Canada are so excessively fertile that we can afford to send one of the best and most readily-available fertilizers across our borders to enrich the fields of others? — Farmer's Advocate

Canadian Poetry.

It is pleasant to note that amid all the cares and anxieties attendant on a struggle for office the Conservatives still find time to cultivate poetry. Like their principles, their verse is very peculiar. The Essex laureate of the Party took occasion at the demonstration in which the Emperor was exhibited amid blue flames, to get off the following: —

Thou brave Macdonald!
Thy heart ne'er quails,
You have shown their frauds
And the steel rails.

When Sir John is Pilot (Pirate?)
We have no fears,
He has steered us safe
For twenty years.

The Hamilton bard of the party has also in the rubbish column of the organ given forth the following: —

They built a hotel,
Which they knew they could sell,
"With slabs and eulls from Oliver's mills."

The Chief himself rushed into rhyme not long ago in that sweet little poem: —

Bone and Skin,
Two statesmen thin.
Would starve the land or near it;
But be it known,
To Skin and Bone,
That flesh and blood won't bear it.

Sir John has also displayed himself in blank verse, as witness this: —

From East to West, wherever I have been,
The country is arising, the foe is
Is sounding. The heater is on fire. You See it running from hill to hill, and when
I was in the Eastern Townships, I heard
The cry echoing from rock to rock a Cross the bosoms of these beautiful lakes
And over the emerald field, "Come to
"Our rescue, John A., or we are lost."
Rum, tum, tum, ti tiddy.

Another of the party poets, catching the inspiration, cries out: —

"Brave Sir John, take us in hand,
And save from ruin thy native land."
With a tooral-lie-rooral-lie-rooral-lie-lum.

In earlier years, before the party lost office, the party poetry was more practical; as for instance, that famous hymn of Sir John's: —

Send me another ten thousand,
Another thousand ten;
And then another ten thousand,
And yet a thousand ten.

Or,

I know a railway whence the bank notes flow.
Still another claims the attention of the poetry-loving public: —

O, farmers, listen unto me
And then go listen to the (Sir John)
If you but give him the Premiers seat
You'll get four dollars a bushel for wheat,
And everyone will be rich in a day,
For that is the way
With the Great John A.

You'll all be millionaires in a day.
CHORUS — And its O, the Brave Macdonald,
The beautiful Macdonald,
The bold and the lovely John A. Ho-oo-aa!

To return again to Essex, we have a choice morceau: —

Shoot the musket! whack the drums!
See, the all-fired hero comes.
Light the torches! blaze the pitch!
He fights his battles in the ditch!
Give him blue lights, give him red,
Enthusim him at a dollar a head!
The brave Macdonald, bully boy,
Will elevate him as high as the kite of Gilde-roy.

We have no room for further extracts, but it is understood the poetry will shortly be published in full in pamphlet form, as a companion to Senator Macpherson's latest work of fiction. — Hamilton Times.

Over ten thousand people were present at the Peel Reform gathering held at Brampton Wednesday. Addresses were presented to both the Premiers, who made suitable replies, and the closest attention was paid by the immense crowd assembled to the remarks of the speakers.

and that the amount of interest to be paid will absorb a great part of the means through which we must look to restoration to our normal state of prosperity. Wheat promises to maintain fair price, but this is doubtless dependent in a great measure on the continuance of the Russo-Turkish war. I doubt expressed a few weeks ago in a column as to the ability of Chicago's politicians to rule the wheat market of the world has since been proved correct. September "bears" are now busy running around the North-West, making every effort to fill their sales in the nineties a month ago. We still maintain the wisdom of our advice to farmers to act on the reasonable figures offering. The efforts of the bears have bent prices meantime. Money market little changed. A somewhat better demand prevails. Journal of Commerce.

A Spider's Fatal Bite.

A week ago last Thursday morning Martha Caesar, a colored woman for years of age, and wife of James Caesar proprietor of a restaurant in Provident R. I. was awakened from sleep by stinging sensation in her under lip, a found that she had been bitten by some insect. As the rude cabin in which she lived, on Babcock street is infested with numerous spiders, she supposed that one of them had crawled upon the bed while she was asleep. During the day her pain increased, and at night it was badly swollen, and had turned to purple color. She applied poultices, a such simple remedies, but the swelling increased during Friday and Saturday and the pain extended to her head and limbs. The Bankrupt Law.

ITS EVIL EFFECTS.

A New York paper gives the following illustration of what may be done to defraud creditors under the Bankrupt law by dishonest men willing to swindle and commit perjury: A merchant bought $12,000 worth of goods on credit and soon after had himself put into bankruptcy by a friend so he would have to pay nothing for a release, procured a friend to be made Assignee, who had the stock appraised at $5,000, which another friend bought in at 50 cents on the dollar and transferred to the original merchant on the very day he received his discharge, thus securing goods worth $12,000 for $2,500. When one of his creditors, purchasing at his store, asked a reduction of the article, giving as a reason that he had lost so much money by him, the debtor exclaimed: "Do you think I was such a fool as to go into bankruptcy for your benefit?" It will be asked, How can such things be, and not come to the notice of the officers of the Court? The proceedings were regular, and the Court relies upon the oaths made before it. Even in the case of the bankrupt who has no desire to defraud, the fees attending the proceedings are so enormous that as the law student said, "The aim of bankruptcy seems to be to make an equitable division of the assets between the officers of the Court and the member of the Bar." — Journal of Commerce.

The "So-Called" Pacific Scandal.

CERTAIN SPEECHES AT THE COBOURG PICTORIAL SIMPLIFIED.

Hon. Matt. C. : Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, you all know I am a moral man; a strictly pure man politically and otherwise. You know, for I have frequently told you, that I am a conscientious person, who would not willingly do or abet anything which was of a questionable character and let me add this profession of purity is not hypocritical as it would be were I a Grit; it is made in sincerity and in truth. With these few prefatory remarks, I wish to say a word on the much talked of Pacific Scandal. Scandal! That is what they call it, and I must confess that legally and technically speaking, scandal is the proper word. As a lawyer, and a somewhat distinguished and esteemed lawyer too, I am obliged to say that the evidence submitted to the court and fully established in connection with the conduct of my right honorable friend John A., in the matter of the Pacific railway charter, quite justifies the use of the word Scandal. Legally speaking it cannot be called a Scandal—for that would imply that the charge had never been proved, which, as you are all aware, it unfortunately was. But, sir, while I say all this, I by no means deem it my duty as a pure person, as aforesaid, to join with those who condemn my right honorable friend for his conduct in the premises. As a moralist—a practical moralist—I do not deem it my duty to withdraw my allegiance from him until he expresses contrition for his offence. By no means. Yet, mark you, I do not seek to pronounce him guiltless. But I stand by him, as such pure and moral politician aforesaid, and ask you, ladies and gentlemen as pure persons to stand by him, on the ground that the Grits are just as bad and have done just as wicked deeds. I have not time just now to point out, but will make way for the right honorable gentlemen himself.

Sir John A. Macdonald, K. C. B., P. D. Q. of Spain, &c.—I am not in the habit of making professions of purity. I never was. (Hear, hear!) The Conservative party of Canada never did and does not now make any such house-top professions. (Cheers.) We leave that for the Grits. (Laughter.) My friend Mr. Cameron acts in the capacity of professing purist for the rest of us, and the rest of us feel to do a good deal as we please. (Renewed laughter.) I don't profess to be immaculate. I may have made mistakes, in fact I'm sure I've made mistakes. There was the Washington Treaty about the Fisheries, for example, and the North West Rebellion; and the Northern Railway affair; and the Pacific Scandal. Sir, I beg pardon, I meant to say scandal. I am sorry to have to differ with so good and learned a man as Mr. Cameron, but I object to his calling that affair a scandal. Sir, it was a vile calumny got up by the Grits for the purpose of pouring obloquy upon me, Sir, there was not a word of truth in any part of it that imputed corrupt motives to me. (A voice—What about your own evidence before the commission?) I don't care a cent for my own evidence or any other man's. I want to get back to power again and I think that whole Pacific business is far enough out of the public mind now to make it safe for me to put on a cheek of brass and declare as I now do declare, that the whole thing was a fraud and a gross libel on myself and my colleagues. It was a slander, sir Mr. Cameron, ladies and gentlemen, it was an infernal slander! I will call upon my honorable friend, Mr. McDougall, to corroborate these few remarks.

Hon. William.—Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen; It gives me extreme pain to be obliged to differ in opinion from my trusted and generous leader. Sir John. I call him generous, because on one occasion I knew he threw $8,000,000 into the sea. In fact, I am sorry to Building Activity in London, England.

A London correspondent writes:—"Fortunes are being made at a rapid rate by brickmakers in the neighborhood of London. An immense impetus to building speculation has been imparted by the prolonged depression in general trade. Money which would have been invested rather recklessly in new house property, and London is being surrounded by a belt of houses run up for the purpose of investing money rather than for meeting the legitimate requirements of increased population. The house property in the market is not sufficient to satisfy the unprecedented demands of capitalists, who are rushing with remarkable unanimity to invest the money in bricks and mortar. The failure of foreign loans and the explosion of bubble companies have thrown a vast mass of unemployed capital into a new direction, and the general opinion appears to be that house property in and about London is the safe investment at the present time. Virgin fields are bought, plotted out, and built upon with magic rapidity, and the houses so run up are tenanted in many cases before they are dry, while the drainage is generally left to chance. Many suburban neighborhoods are being rapidly spoiled by the haphazard manner in which open spaces are covered by speculative buildings, and existing property is in many cases severely depreciated. Brickmakers, however, are making immense fortunes out of the present abnormal activity. The prices for bricks now average fifty to one hundred per cent. over those prevailing only a year ago. Auctioneers who trade in house property are so abnormally busy, and funeral undertakers in every new neighborhood have almost more business than they decently can cover."

Brigham Young's Co-operative Store.

A curious feature of Brigham Young's despotism in the huge co-operative store erected at Salt Lake City in 1868 at a cost of $150,000. Through Brigham's influence, or rather command, the saints took shares, in sums ranging $100 to 500 until the whole capital stock of the institution, amounting to nearly $800,000, was taken up. Branch stores were established in other parts of the territory, and over the portals of all was painted, "Holiness to the Lord." The aim of the prophet and his partners was to crush out the gentile and apostate merchants and enrich themselves. Orders were issued to Mormons not to buy goods of gentiles or apostates, and these orders were enforced by policemen who were stationed in front of the objectionable stores and who turned customers that were about to enter. At the same time the various agencies throughout the territory were forbidden to buy their fabrics and provisions anywhere except at Brigham's co-operative establishment. Its sales some years amounted to $4,000,000. Finally the tyranny became unbearable, since the Mormons had to pay exorbitant prices, and in time many of them secretly purchased much of what they wanted from gentile and apostate merchants; unbelievers who moved into Utah and of course gave the latter their patronage. The dividends of the co-operative store finally fell away, its credit declined, and bankruptcy now stares it in the face. Brigham induced hundreds of Mormons to deposit their savings with this institution, which has the peculiarity of holding fast whatever goes into its capacious maw. As a gigantic swindler, Brigham was not overshadowed by any other man of this generation.

Business Prospects.

The business outlook still continues encouraging. Our merchants, however do not look for excessive business or great profits, but there is a general expectation of healthy activity and

And over the eternal field, "Come to "Our rescue, John A., or we are lost."
Run, rum, tum, ti tididity.
Another of the party poets writes:

stitution, amounting to nearly $800,000, was taken up. Branch stores were established in other parts of the territory, and over the portals of all was painted, "Holiness to the Lord." The aim of the prophet and his partners was to crush out the gentile and apostate merchants and enrich themselves. Orders were issued to Mormons not to buy goods of gentiles or apostates, and these orders were enforced by policemen who were stationed in front of the objectionable stores and who turned customers that were about to enter. At the same time the various agencies throughout the territory were forbidden to buy their fabrics and provisions anywhere except at Brigham's co-operative establishment. Its sales some years amounted to $4,000,000. Finally the tyranny became unbearable, since the Mormons had to pay exorbitant prices, and in time many of them secretly purchased much of what they wanted from gentile and apostate merchants; unbelievers who moved into Utah and of course gave the latter their patronage. The dividends of the co-operative store finally fell away, its credit declined, and bankruptcy now stares it in the face. Brigham induced hundreds of Mormons to deposit their savings with this institution, which has the peculiarity of holding fast whatever goes into its capacious maw. As a gigantic swindler, Brigham was not overshadowed by any other man of this generation.

Business Prospects.

The business outlook still continues encouraging. Our merchants, however do not look for excessive business or great profits, but there is a general expectation of healthy activity and reasonable gains are compared with the last two years. The conservative policy pursued by country buyers for some time past has resulted in keeping stocks low, and whole salers are reaping the benefit of this self denial, now that the condition of the harvest warrants greater freedom in making purchases. It will be well to remember, however, that there is a great deal of indebtedness to be wiped away, and that the amount of interest to be paid will absorb a great part of the means through which we must look to a restoration to our normal state of prosperity. Wheat promises to maintain a fair price, but this is doubtless dependent in a great measure on the continuance of the Russo-Turkish war. The doubt expressed a few weeks ago in this column as to the ability of Chicago speculators to rule the wheat market of the world has since been proved correct. September "bears" are now busy running around the North-West, making every effort to fill their sales in the nineties of a month ago. We still maintain the wisdom of our advice to farmers to sell at the reasonable figures offering. The efforts of the bears have bent prices up meantime. Money market little changed. A somewhat better demand prevails.—Journal of Commerce.

A Spider's Fatal Bite.

A week ago last Thursday morning, Martha Caesar, a colored woman forty years of age, and wife of James Caesar, proprietor of a restaurant in Providence R. I. was awakened from sleep by a stinging sensation in her under lip, and found that she had been bitten by some insect. As the rude cabin in which they live, on Babcock street is infested by numerous spiders, she supposed that one of them had crawled upon the bed while she was asleep. During the day her lip pained her severely, and at night it was badly swollen, and had turned to a purple color. She applied poultices and such simple remedies, but the swelling increased during Friday and Saturday, and the pain extended to her head and limbs. On Sunday Dr. Mathews was called and found that the poison had made its way into her system so rapidly that there were but slight hopes of her recovery from its malignant effects. However, he prescribed soothing medicines and applied poultices which

PETTITT'S EYE-SALVE.

An Infallible Remedy for all Diseases of the Eye (acute or chronic), Granulation of the Lids, Ulceration of the Lacrymal Glands, Film, and Weakness of the Vision from any cause.

THE AMERICAN EYE-SALVE is presented to the public with the assurance of its efficiency as a curative of most diseases of the eye, acute or chronic inflammation, whether induced by scrofulous origin or otherwise, weakness or defect of vision, diminished tone of the optic nerve, or a diseased state of the tissues constituting that organ. Also, for all persons whose vocation requires an incessant action of the eyes, the Salve will act as a charm in restoring a uniform healthy action, where weakness, pain, and misery may have long threatened a fatal termination. It is the most simple, safe, and effectual remedy ever discovered. The materials of which it is made are pure, perfect, and costly, compounded with elaborate care and exactness, safe in its application, being used externally, and, of course, avoiding the pain and danger which necessarily attends the introduction of caustic minerals and eye-washes. RINGWORM AND OLD CHRONIC SORES, of scrofulous origin, or resulting from whatever cause, yield to the AMERICAN EYE-SALVE. IT IS USED SUCCESSFULLY FOR PILES. Its soothing effect is immediate, and a permanent cure requires but a few applications. The proprietors of "DR. J. PETTITT'S AMERICAN EYE-SALVE," while making new and improved machinery for making a more perfect box for the Eye-Salve, have changed the Trade Mark on the cover so as to correspond with the Cut on the Wrapper, Circulars, Advertisements, etc. We call attention to this, as it might otherwise be regarded as counterfeiting.

We were shown a straight beam chilled plow, made by the above firm. The Brisco House Liquor Case.

CONCLUSION OF THE EVIDENCE.

On Friday afternoon the prosecution against Mr. Jesse Potter, proprietor of the Brisco House, was. The following additional evidence was taken:

CHARLES CORNELL, sworn.—I am the bar-tender; I have not sold any liquor since I have been in the Brisco House, in the employ of Jesse Potter. Between the 4th of July and the 4th August I sold what they called claret; I do not know whether it is claret or not. It was presented to me by Mr. Potter as claret, as a temperance drink; it was used as a flavor in the soda water fountain. I frequently put in the soda water and lemonade as a flavor. I do not recollect selling any to Mr. Rookledge of Mr. Yokome. I sold soda water and lemonade during July and August. I do not recollect selling any claret during that time. I do not recollect selling any claret on the 12th of July.

CROSS EXAMINED BY MR. ROE.—On the inside of the fountain there is a can in which the flavorings for syrups are kept. I would put in the glass a small quantity of syrup—claret or other flavoring. I never knew it to be an intoxicating liquor until I heard of it in this case. I always supposed it a temperance drink. I never saw a person intoxicated or affected by drinking claret.

WILLIAM TILLEY, sworn.—I live in Napanee. I do not know the drink called claret. The first claret I ever got I got at Mr. M. W. Prunyn's, on the order of Mr. Hogle. I tested eight ounces of claret, and I obtained from it 8 per cent of alcohol. I got the same quantity of beer, and only obtained 4½ per cent. of alcohol. The beer I got was of a very poor quality I understand claret is a French wine. Light claret is supposed to contain from 8 to 9 per cent. of alcohol. The best ales and porter contain from 7 to 8 per cent. of alcohol.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. ROE.—I do not know that the liquor I got at Prunyn's was claret; I think it was a "doctored" liquor. I am doubtful if there was any of the juice of the grape in it. There would be alcohol in any article which undergoes fermentation.

MR. ROE contended that none of the witnesses swore that the liquor drank was spirituous; that the claret referred to was used as a flavor for temperance drinks, that as soon as it was suggested that it was a prohibited liquor Mr. Potter ceased selling it that Mr. Tilley's evidence was irrelevant because it did not deal with the liquor Mr. Potter sold; and that the sale had not been proven to have taken place between the 4th of July and the 4th of August.

MR. REEVE claimed that the liquor sold to Mr. Rookledge was during the specified time; that claret was a wine, and therefore a prohibited liquor in the terms of the Act and that the quantity sold did not affect the fact, as it was illegal to sell a drop as much as it was a gallon.

After consultation the magistrates, Messrs. Williams, Forward, and Doller, agreed that the charge had been sustained, and imposed a fine of $20, with costs $13.95, on Mr. Potter.

NAPANEE JUSTICE.

On Friday last about 8:15 p. m. Mr. Claus Rathman, R. S. Higley and A. Benson were walking down Main street, they halted opposite the Tichborne House corner, all parties were intoxicated, yet perfectly quiet and proceeding to their homes. Mr. Alex. Roe was passing at this time, and when near Rathman, the latter simply looked in his face, Roe proceeded a few steps, turned and asked Rathman, what he meant by insulting him, at the same time calling him a "d—d drunken rowdy" and saying that a person could not pass the street without being insulted by "d—d drunken rowdies" &c. Benson now interfered in behalf of his friend, he was met with similar epithets from Roe. Higley now approached and in a very civil manner denied Roe's accusation, saying he would have to retract his insulting remarks, at the same time proceeding to pull off his coat, Roe abused him as he did the others. Constable Storms now appearing, he was ordered by Roe to arrest Benson (Higley in the meantime escaped) which he proceeded to do. Roe assisting, before being called upon by Storms. Benson was finally arrested, with the usual maltreatment, and when a short distance up John street, Higley re-appeared and tried to rescue Benson, but with the assistance of a few citizens he was also secured and both parties were taken to the Lock-up.

The following witnesses were sworn before Mayor Williams, in the Town Hall on Saturday at 9:30. Mr. A. L. Morden for defence, Mr. Roe plead his own case.

Jno T. GRANGE.—saw Higley escape in Chas. Paisley's gateway. The crowd had been trying to rescue prisoner and I considered it my duty as magistrate to arrest him, which I did with the help of others.

JERRY STORMS.—First saw Benson and Roe, talking roughly. He said Arthur struck him, and asked me to arrest him, I demanded Roe's assistance and arrested him because he was drunk. Think Higley tried to take Benson out of my hands. Higley was always very steady, this is the first time he was ever arrested.

Mr. A. H. ROE, called.—[Mr. Roe's evidence was objected to on account of his infidelity. He was asked a few questions by Mr. A. L. Morden and the Mayor to which, he answered substantially as follows—Believed in an Almighty God, but had not sufficient evidence upon which to form an opinion, regarding a future punishment and a hereafter as he was not dead yet—did not wish to swear to a lie and did not know if there was a future world or not—had a hope for salvation—Mr. Roe was now sworn conditionally.]

RE was now sworn—When I passed Rathman last night, he stuck his nose in my face and looked at me. I asked at Mill Point, we came home together on the Pilgrim. Roe said we were parcel of d—d drunken bawlers—son in particular. He was talking language to me. My coat was pulled off. Not certain what Benson says. Roe called Benson a d—d den loafer or words to that effect.

[Adjourned till 5 p. m., in Court Chamber. The accused giving bail $100 each.]

W. T. CASEY.—At the commence saw Roe back of from Higley. Roe kick Benson, but did not see B. strike Roe. Roe kicked at High Lock-up door. When Storms had of Benson alone he went along qu. All parties had been drinking.

W. D. MADDEN; W. G. STEVEN ALEX. McLIVER and JAMES BLYTHE were sworn, the latter testified to have seen Roe run across the street opp. Paisley's, and kick Higley, while later was on his hands and knees.

WM. PERRY—thought Roe struck Benson in the Lock-up.

FRANK HOLDER—saw Roe & Benson with a stick or cane side the Lock-up.

JOHN PAISLEY, saw both parties forced into Lock-up. [In answer question from Mr. Morden, this witness testified that Roe was the most abominable man in the crowd during the arrest the way to the Lock-up, and afterwards.] WM. FERGUSON and others said 1 man did not walk around Roe at first simply looked in his face.

Mr. Morden spoke in behalf of the accused he being followed by Mr. Benson was fined $15 and $5.20 and Higley $5, and $4.20 costs, to be forthwith.

With the above sworn evidence before us and the candid opinions of several respectable citizens, who witnessed row on Friday night,—and of which saw sufficient to convince us of the calumny of the whole affair—we fearfully give the following.

Mr. Alex. Roe, one of our Town Councillors—who introduced a by-law for the enforcement of public morality the 4th of June last—passed an incensed man on the street, whom he looks at him. Roe immediately violated his oath of office, by stopping and abusing this person in a grossly insulting manner. He calls on the Town Council to make an arrest, this off with most idiotic blind obeys his command and was effected with the assistance of Roe. On their way to place of confinement, the prisoners, handcuffed, and comparatively helpless are subject to the taunting and insulting epithets of Roe, accompanied with brutality in the shape of kicks and blows which no sober man—save with the instincts of a human brute would guilty of. He also, while helping secure the prisoners in the Lock Continued his abuse by clubbing Benson on the foot—this prisoner was knocked down by some party by blows of a cane on head, either outside or inside, the effects of which were sufficient to cause serious alarm and a summons for help during the night. No light used in the Lock-up and what was therein cannot be well attested to, except that blows were heard, and a light match at the window revealed evidence which was given at the time. After leaving the Lock-up the plaintiff expressed opinions of disapproval at injustice of the whole proceedings met by Roe in his usual bullying manner saying "we will put down rowdiness" also personal and insulting allusions which excited the disgust of every liberal-minded man present and scores of the most respectable citizens were listeners on occasion, as his voice was heard above the din of the excited crowd, fact he acted throughout, more like mad bull than a human being. After unlawfully causing the arrest, I complained of the prisoners' resistance which was natural when their rig were trampled upon, and a knowledge of this fact secured the sympathy of

The Covered Bridge.

One of the most satisfactory pieces of work accomplished by the street committee this season, has been expended on the Covered Bridge. This old landmark which has stood time and tide for 37 years, was sadly in need of a thorough overhauling. The oak sills on the East end, being below the ground line, and receiving surface water and drainage from the road, were completely rotted through, as were also the ends of the main stretchers on each side, these latter—after raising the bridge 8 inches with screw-jacks were spliced, and secured with stirrups, and now rest on two oak end-sills 30 ft. in length. The work is done in a very efficient manner, upon which six men have been busy for one week. The iron work, wood work, superintendence and labour costing about $70.

A letter from Chester, Pa., says the farmers are armed to protect themselves, families, and property from the villainous hordes of tramps. The latter attempt to wreck trains, and captured a milk train a few mornings ago and robbed a drover who happened to be on board. The tramps also broke into an express car on him, at the same time calling him a "d—d drunken rowdy" and saying that a person could not pass the street without being insulted by "d—d drunken rowdies" &c. Benson now interfered in behalf of his friend, he was met with similar epithets from Roe. Higley now approached and in a very civil manner denied Roe's accusation, saying he would have to retract his insulting remarks, at the same time proceeding to pull off his coat. Roe abused him as he did the others. Constable Storms now appearing, he was ordered by Roe to arrest Benson (Higley in the meantime escaped) which he proceeded to do. Roe assisting, before being called upon by Storms. Benson was finally arrested, with the usual maltreatment, and when a short distance up John street, Higley re-appeared and tried to rescue Benson, but with the assistance of a few citizens he was also secured and both parties were taken to the Lock-up.

The following witnesses were sworn before Mayor Williams, in the Town Hall on Saturday at 9.30. Mr. A. L. Morden for defence, Mr. Roe plead his own case.

Jno T. GRANGE.—saw Higley escape in Chas. Paisley's gateway. The crowd had been trying to rescue prisoner and I considered it my duty as magistrate to arrest him, which I did with the help of others.

JERRY STORMS.—First saw Benson and Roe, talking roughly. He said Arthur struck him, and asked me to arrest him. I demanded Roe's assistance and arrested him because he was drunk. Think Higley tried to take Benson out of my hands. Higley was always very steady, this is the first time he was ever arrested.

Mr. A. H. Roe, called.—[Mr. Roe's evidence was objected to on account of his infidelity. He was asked a few questions by Mr. A. L. Morden and the Mayor to which, he answered substantially as follows:—Believed in an Almighty God, but had not sufficient evidence upon which to form an opinion, regarding a future punishment and a hereafter as he was not dead yet—did not wish to swear to a he and did not know if there was a future world or not—had a hope for salvation—Mr. Roe was now sworn conditionally.]

RE was now sworn.—When I passed Rathman last night, he stuck his nose in my face and passed round me. I asked him what he wanted and told him to mind his own business, Arthur Benson now said he wrote that article in the Standard. I said I did not want to talk to any drunken rowdy like him, it was now dark, Stephen tried to keep him back, and called me a d—d liar saying he was no drunken rowdy. Higley now came up and took off his coat to fight. I now saw Storms and ordered him to arrest Benson for being drunk. Storms tussled with him and crowd tried to get him away, he had a chain around his wrist, he pulled other hand away and struck me opposite Miller's Grocery, I gave him a good sound kick. Just before that Higley ran between and tried to break the hold, Storms called on assistance, Jno. T. Grange, Jno. Fraser and Alex Henry caught Higley in gate way and five of us took him to lock-up Jerry, Henry, Fraser, and myself went in with prisoners, I struck Benson on foot when he refused to take it from jam of inside door. On the road to Lock-up some one pulled me down from behind, think it was Stephen. Benson was drunk, disorderly, and abusive, never saw a man act worse, wanted to quarrel and fight with somebody—I did not kick Higley in Lock-up door. He called me a d—d liar four or five times and he came up (at first) to quarrel with me, without me saying a word. I think Benson, Rathman and Band fellows wanted to whip me. I believe the affair originated at the Campbell House. Rathman wanted to get in at the dinner (on the 11th) and I put him out. The Band make a habit of getting drunk around the streets, and have been doing it for some time. About thirty including Higley were trying to liberate Benson.

us and the candid opinions of several respectable citizens, who witnessed row on Friday night,—and of which was sufficient to convince us of the calify of the whole affair—we fearfully give the following.

Mr. Alex. Roe, one of our Town Councillors—who introduced a by-law for the enforcement of public morality the 4th of June last—passed an incensed man on the street, who me looks at him. Roe immediately violated his oath of office, by stopping and abusing this person in a grossly insulting manner. He calls on the Town Constable to make an arrest, this off with most idiotic blind obeys his command and was effected with the assistance of Roe. On their way to place of confinement, the prisoners, handcuffed, and comparatively helpless are subject to the taunting and insulting epithets of Roe, accompanied with bally in the shape of kicks and blows which no sober man—save with the stricts of a human brute would guilty of. He also, while helping secure the prisoners in the Lock Continued his abuse by clubbing Benson on the foot—this prisoner was knocked down by some party by blows of a cane on head, either outside or inside, the effects of which were sufficient to cause serious alarm and a summons for help during the night. No light used in the Lock-up and what was therein cannot be well attested to, except that blows were heard, and a light match at the window revealed some evidence which was given at the trial. After leaving the Lock-up the plaintiff expressed opinions of disapproval at injustice of the whole proceedings witnessed by Roe in his usual bullying manner saying "we will put down rowdies" also personal and insulting allusions which excited the disgust of every liberal-minded man present and scores of the respectable citizens were listeners on occasion, as his voice was heard above the din of the excited crowd, fact he acted throughout, more like mad bull than a human being. After unlawfully causing the arrest, I complained of the prisoners' resistance which was natural when their rights were trampled upon, and a knowledge of this fact secured the sympathy of the crowd, Roe's presence was an unnecessary aggravation as they proceed quietly when this new-born official kept his distance. In his address at the trial, Roe said he "did not care how much he abused people"—a fact, was verified on the evening previous. He exulted over his brutality, proving total want of feeling. He paraded now obnoxious By-law in Court as proof of the ways of transgressors and punishment thereof—himself except. He was allowed to express his long-mouthed views of the case to crowds who obstructed the pavement, the Chief witness asked, why he was favored to the exclusion of other speakers, gave no answer. There is not one palliating feature in Roe's execrable conduct of Friday night and we have given all particulars, public demand it, as there is a turn of public opinion on this case which will bear fruit in the future.

To sum up, we have no wish to make disparaging allusion towards, or even into Mr. Roe's former character or history—which is more courtesy than he has shown so far regarding others—but in return for a fancied insult (which is listed only in his disordered imagination) retaliate by insults, aggravating in extreme, accompanied by violence, a personal injury to his fellow-citizens, their arrest and imprisonment. He insulted people of respectability, on Friday night in question, by his outlandish behavior. He insulted the town by his outrageous violations of law, decency, and order. He insulted and browbeated straightforward witnesses by doubting the veracity of their oaths. He insulted the opposite counsel, and we believe he would in e Brisco House Liquor Case.

CONCLUSION OF THE EVIDENCE.

On Friday afternoon the prosecution inst Mr. Jesse Potter, proprietor of Brisco House, was. The following litational evidence was taken :

CHARLES CORNELL, sworn.—I am the tender ; I have not sold any liquor ce I have been in the Brisco House, in employ of Jesse Potter. Between 4th of July and the 4th August I sold at they called claret ; I do not know ether it is claret or not. It was pre-ted to me by Mr. Potter as claret, as imperance drink ; it was used as a flavor he soda water fountain. I frequently in the soda water and lemonade as a or. I do not recollect selling any to Rookledge of Mr. Yokome. I sold a water and lemonade during July and gust. I do not recollect selling any et during that time. I do not recol-selling any claret on the 12th of y.

ROSS EXAMINED BY MR. ROE.—On the de of the fountain there is a can in ch the flavorings for syrups are kept.
ould put in the glass a small quantity syrup—claret or other flavoring. I er knew it to be an intoxicating or until I heard of it in this case. I ays supposed it a temperance drink yer saw a person intoxicated or affec-by drinking claret.

VILLIAM TILLEY, sworn.—I live in anee. I do not know the drink called et. The first claret I ever got I got Ir. M. W. Pruyn's, on the order of Hogle. I tested eight ounces of et, and I obtained from it 8 per cent cohol. I got the same quantity of et, and only obtained 4½ per cent.
of hol. The beer I got was of a very quality I understand claret is a uch wine. Light claret is supposed ontain from 8 to 9 per cent. of alcohol. The best ales and porter contain 1 7 to 8 per cent. of alcohol.

ROSS EXAMINED BY MR. ROE.—I do know that the liquor I got at Pruyn's claret ; I think it was a "doctored" or. I am doubtful if there was any e juice of the grape in it. There ld be alcohol in any article which ergoes fermentation.

R. ROE contended that none of the esses swore that the liquor drank spirituous ; that the claret referred as used as a flavor for temperance ks, that as soon as it was suggested it was a prohibited liquor Mr. Potter ed selling it that Mr. Tilley's evidence irrelevant because it did not deal the liquor Mr. Potter sold ; and the sale had not been proven to have n place between the 4th of July and 4th of August.

R. REEVE claimed that the liquor to Mr. Rookledge was during the lified time ; that claret was a wine, therefore a prohibited liquor in the s of the Act and that the quantity did not affect the fact, as it was al to sell a drop as much as it was a n.

ter consultation the magistrates,
rs. Williams, Forward, and Doller, ed that the charge had been sustained and imposed a fine of $20, with costs 5, on Mr. Potter.

WM. MCCAY saw Benson strike Roe, and Roe kick him back again, think Roe kicked some one in Lock-up door.

HENRY DOUGLASS, saw Higley jerk off coat and rush into crowd to assist Benson, Storms said "Roe arrest that man" but he got away, returned, and tried to release Benson, I did follow or go into the crowd some party struck Roe in front of the Methodist Church.

JAS. ALLEN (Chief of Police) saw Benson and Higley in Lock-up. They were intoxicated. Never saw Dick so bad as he was last night. I did not see the row, was at a trial at the Mayor's Office.

(FOR THE DEFENCE.)

NATHAN EMPY—was standing in his stable door, heard Roe's voice, came up and heard Higley say, "Alex you will have to take back those words." Stevenson caught hold of Higley's coat collar, and the coat came off. Roe called Higley a "1—d drunken loafer" twice (Roe denied this) Roe called on Storms to arrest this man. They ran down John street, were finally arrested and taken to Lock-up. This Mr. Roe used very abusive language to the boys. Jerry struck at Higley with cane, and I received it on my arm. Benson was intoxicated.

A. L. MORDEN—"Between Higley and Roe who was the most abusive, men?"— (Empy) "Mr. Roe was." (Roe denied calling Benson a s—h, said he never used the expression) (to A. H. Roe)
"Higley did not go back to get his coat but came right towards Roe."

WM. DUNHAM, saw the arrest Roe had hold of Benson's left hand and Storms put "nippers" on other. Near the Tichborne House Benson was striking out, and "Roe said you will a" and kicked him (here witness explained—near the thighs) at the commencement Higley came close to strike
Roe, but did not (admitted by Roe.)

ALLAN RUFTAN, saw Roe kick Benson once, saw Benson's foot in the door and Roe pounding it with a stick. Think Roe struck Benson before he went in cell.

SAM LEGGETT.—Saw the arrest, saw Roe kick Benson once. Heard Roe call them drunken loafers first. Higley was pulled back after coat was off. Roe said
I am not afraid of a d—d one of you (denied by Roe.) [Mr. Roe questioned him as to whether his evidence had been tampered with previous to his appearing in court—Nothing of the kind had been attempted with any witness.]

RICHARD HIGLEY (committed for interfering with a constable) I met Benson at Mill Point, we came home together on the Pilgrim. Roe said we were all a parcel of d—d drunken loafers—Benson in particular. He was talking strong language to me. My coat was partly pulled off. Not certain what Benson did say. Roe called Benson a d—d drunken loafer or words to that effect.

[Adjourned till 5 p. m., in Council Chamber. The accused giving bail in $100 each.]

W. T. CASEY.—At the commencement saw Roe back of from Higley. Saw Roe kick Benson, but did not see Benson strike Roe. Roe kicked at Higley in Lock-up door. When Storms had hold of Benson alone he went along quietly.
All parties had been drinking.

W. D. MADDEN ; J. G. STEVENSON ;
ALEX. McIVER and JAMES BLYTHESOME, were sworn, the latter testified to having seen Roe run across the street opposite Paisley's, and kick Higley, while the latter was on his knees and knees.

WM. PERRY—thought Roe struck at Benson in the Lock-up.

FRANK HOLDER—saw Roe strike
Benson with a stick or cane inside the Lock-up.

JOHN PAISLEY, saw both prisoners forced into Lock-up. In answer to a insulted the presiding magistrate if he could have done so with impunity. In fact he has shown himself possessed of the elements of the worst rowdy that ever disgraced our streets.

And yet, he bases his complaint upon what he calls an insult, and the arrested parties are imprisoned and punished, whereas, ROE, was—in the opinion of a large majority—the instigator, of the whole affair and as such should have received the full benefit of his own by-law, and, as the case now stands, it is a mockery of justice, a miserable farce, a contemptible subterfuge, and a flagrant outrage upon citizen's rights.

Since the above was in type we have read our town contemporary—the Stan- dard's article and our readers will please notice what is contained therein about "glaring exaggerations designed to prejudice the public mind in a desired direction." Also, that Roe's profanity and abusive language are withheld, his kicking and clubbing propensities are exultingly described as something the prisoners richly deserved, his bravery (?) is exalted, and his contemptible trick of kicking Higley while on the ground is innocently ascribed to "some one." And yet the Standard man, who reported the trial gives the above misrepresentations to his readers, and which is in direct contradiction to the published sworn evidence of disinterested witness. He also says
"Mr. Morden made an attack upon Mr.
Roe with a view to damage his social standing"—where does Mr. Roe stand ? that is the question. The last five lines of the Standard article have no reference whatever to the case. One thing is certain, the above important points have been carefully, "doctored" and it looks as if it were written by the immaculate Roe himself.

In connection with the above we have a word to say regarding the treatment of prisoners. In making an arrest Mr.
Jerry Storms has no right to apply that chain he uses, around the wrist, and twist in the manner he does, at the risk of crippling an arrested party. We can produce testimony from those who witnessed the act, to the effect that a prisoner has heretofore been arrested unlawfully and his wrist rendered useless for a week through the inhuman use of this instrument of torture. In the present case Storms was harsher than necessary, and considering the illegality of the arrest, he was culpable for overstepping his bounds. Another grievance needs remedy, when the prisoners were in the lock-up they and the constables were in total darkness, while maltreatment of the most cowardly nature was in progress, and although one of the volunteer assistants—Mr. Alex. Henry was asked repeatedly by outsiders to procure a light, he gave his word that he would see fair play. We hope he saw it.

Mr. Morden spoke in behalf of the accused he being followed by Mr. Roe. Benson was fined $15 and $5.20 costs and Higley $5, and $4.20 costs, to be paid forthwith.

With the above sworn evidence before us and the candid opinions of scores of respectable citizens, who witnessed the row on Friday night,—and of which we saw sufficient to convince us of the rascality of the whole affair—we fearlessly give the following.

Tweed's Rascality.

Record of his Crime and Corruption.

New York, 17.—The Sun contains an interview with John Morrissey on the Tweed revelations. Morrissey says: For years Tweed had two mistresses. One lived within a stone's throw of his house in Fifth Avenue, and in the summer as near his residence in Greenwich. Rumour says he gave those two women $1,800,000 of the public money which he stole from the city treasury. While he and his band of robbers were in authority he corrupted everybody and everything from the highest to the lowest. He even controlled the courts. Tweed had corporations seized; his son and relatives of the other members of the Ring were appointed receivers. They trumped up charges against railroads to give money to their pets whom they had appointed receivers. This sort of work was done until the Union Pacific Railway Company and other Corporations removed the officers to other States. They held one million people, this city in bondage. There was no protection for life or property, under the rule of this band of robbers. In 1868, said M., I began to fight him and band; I organized to fight what was known as the young Democracy and went to Albany in 1870 to carry on the fight remaining there nearly four months. I persuaded Tilden and Greely to go there and speak against the ring charter. It cost the ring $1,000,000 to carry the charter through the Legislature. After the exposure of the ring in 1871, I persuaded Tilden to go to the Rochester Convention and attack them." Morrissey does not believe in the honesty of the present committee. He says it is evidently in the interest of John Kelley, and has no doubt Kelley and Tweed would rather implicate him than any man in New York. He says: "I have fought both, but I don't know what they can say of me. I never held office under the city government. I never was interested in a contract with the city directly or indirectly."

To Young Men.

While we are endeavoring to impress our young men of Ontario with the view that the mercantile ranks are already too full, and that it will be better for themselves and the country if they become producers instead of middle men, we find efforts in a like direction being made elsewhere. For instance, it is stated that attempts to cultivate grains and roots in new districts of the Maritime Provinces are meeting with much success. The Halifax Herald says that the depression in the lumber trade is sending the young men, who have left the comparatively tame work of the farm for the excitement of lumbering, back to the plow and harrow. These young farmers are beginning to see that good honest work on the farm give a far better return directly and indirectly, than labor in the forests, and on the streams. As an illustration of the benefits of farming versus lumbering, it is said that the northern district of Queen's County, N. S., was never so prosperous a state as at present, and it is expected that this district will grow enough wheat, barley and rye to furnish its own bread.—Monetary Times respectable citizens, who witnessed the row on Friday night,—and of which we saw sufficient to convince us of the rascality of the whole affair—we fearlessly give the following.

Mr. Alex. Roe, one of our Town Councillors—who introduced a by-law for the enforcement of public morality on the 4th of June last—passed an intoxicated man on the street, who merely looks at him. Roe immediately violates his oath of office, by stopping and abusing this person in a grossly insulting manner. He calls on the Town Constable to make an arrest, this official with most idiotic blindness obeys his command and which is effected with the assistance of Roe. On their way to a place of confinement, the prisoners, (one hand-cuffed, and comparatively helpless,)—are subject to the taunting and insulting epithets of Roe, accompanied with brutality in the shape of kicks and blows, which no sober man—save with the instincts of a human brute would be guilty of. He also, while helping to secure the prisoners in the Lock-up. Continued his abuse by clapping Benson on the foot—this prisoner was also knocked down by some party by two blows of a club on the head, either outside or inside, the effects of which were sufficient to cause serious alarm and a summons for help during the night. No light was used in the Lock-up and what was done therein cannot be well attested to, except that blows were heard, and a lighted match at the window revealed some evidence which was given at the trial. After leaving the Lock-up the plainly expressed opinions of disapproval at the injustice of the whole proceedings were met by Roe in his usual bullying manner saying "we will put down rowdyism &c., also personal and insulting allusions which excited the disgust of every liberal-minded man present and scores of the most respectable citizens were listeners on the occasion, as his voice was heard far above the din of the excited crowd, in fact he acted throughout, more like a mad bull than a human being. After unlawfully causing the arrest, Roe complained of the prisoners resisting, which was natural when their rights were trampled upon, and a knowledge of this fact secured the sympathy of the crowd, Roe's presence was an unnecessary aggravation as they proceeded quietly when this new-born official kept his distance. In his address at the close of the trial, Roe said he "did not care how much he abused people,"—a fact, as was verified on the evening previous. He exulted over his brutality, proving his total want of feeling. He paraded his now obnoxious By-law in Court as proof of "the ways of transgressors" and the punishment thereof—himself excepted. He was allowed to express his loud-mouthed views of the case to crowds who obstructed the pavement, the Chief when asked, why he was favored to the exclusion of other speakers, gave no answer. There is not one palliating feature in Roe's execrable conduct of Friday night, and we have given all particulars, the public demand it, as there is a turning point hinging on this case which will bear fruit in the future.

To sum up, we have no wish to make disparaging, allusion towards, or enter into Mr. Roe's former character or history—which is more courtesy than he has shown so far regarding others—but he, in return for a fancied insult (which existed only in his disordered imagination) retaliate by insults, aggravating in the extreme, accompanied by threats and personal injury to be at once punishing in their arrest and imprisonment. He insulted people of respectability, on the night in question, by his intemperate language. He insulted the town by his outrageous violations of law, decency, and order. He insulted a browbeaten straightforward witnesses by doubting the veracity of their oaths. He insulted the opposing counsel, and we believe he would have Greely to go there and speak against the ring charter. It cost the ring $1,000,000 to carry the charter through the Legislature. After the exposure of the ring in 1871, I persuaded Tilden to go to the Rochester Convention and attack them." Morrissey does not believe in the honesty of the present committee. He says it is evidently in the interest of John Kelley, and has no doubt Kelley and Tweed would rather implicate him than any man in New York. He says: "I have fought both, but I don't know what they can say of me. I never held office under the city government. I never was interested in a contract with the city directly or indirectly."

To Young Men.

While we are endeavoring to impress our young men of Ontario with the view that the mercantile ranks are already too full, and that it will be better for themselves and the country if they become producers instead of middle men, we find efforts in a like direction being made elsewhere. For instance, it is stated that attempts to cultivate grains and roots in new districts of the Maritime Provinces are meeting with much success. The Halifax Herald says that the depression in the lumber trade is sending the young men, who have left the comparatively tame work of the farm for the excitement of lumbering, back to the plow and harrow. These young farmers are beginning to see that good honest work on the farm give a far better return directly and indirectly, than labor in the forests, and on the streams. As an illustration of the benefits of farming versus lumbering, it is said that the northern district of Queen's County, N. S., was never so prosperous a state as at present, and it is expected that this district will grow enough wheat, barley and rye to furnish its own bread.—Monetary Times

sulted the presiding magistrate if he could have done so with impunity. In he has shown himself possessed of the elements of the worst rowdy at ever disgraced our streets. And yet, he bases his complaint upon that he calls an insult, and the arrested tries are imprisoned and punished, whereas, ROE, was—in the opinion of a large majority—the instigator, of the whole affair and as such, should have reaped the full benefit of his own by-law, as the case now stands, it is a mockery of justice, a miserable farce, a contemptible subterfuge, and a flagrant outrage upon citizen's rights.

Since the above was in type we have read our town contemporary—the Standard's article and our readers will please notice what is contained therein about luring exaggerations designed to prejudice the public mind in a desired direction. Also, that Roe's profanity and abusive language are withheld, his kicking and clubbing propensities are exultingly ascribed as something the prisoners highly deserved, his bravery (?) is exalted, and his contemptible trick of kicking gley while on the ground is innocently ribbed to "some one." And yet the Standard man, who reported the trial, res the above misrepresentations to his readers, and which is in direct contradiction to the published sworn evidence disinterested witness. He also says Mr. Morden made an attack upon Mr. Roe with a view to damage his social standing—where does Mr. Roe stand? it is the question. The last five lines of the Standard article have no reference whatever to the case. One thing is certain, the above important points have been carefully, "doctored" and it looks as if they were written by the immaculate himself.

In connection with the above we have read to say regarding the treatment of prisoners. In making an arrest Mr. Henry Storms has no right to apply that which he uses, around the wrist, and at in the manner he does, at the risk of crippling an arrested party. We can produce testimony from those who witnessed the act, to the effect that a prisoner has heretofore been arrested unlawfully and his wrist rendered useless for a week through the inhuman use of this instrument of torture. In the present case Storms was harsher than necessary, considering the illegality of the arrest, he was culpable for overstepping his bounds. Another grievance needs remedy, when the prisoners were in the lock-up and the constables were in total kness, while maltreatment of the most cowardly nature was in progress, although one of the volunteer assistants—Mr. Alex. Henry was asked repeatedly by outsiders to procure a light, gave his word that he would see fair play. We hope he saw it.

How to Make a Well

Mr. S. W. Pinkham has a paper on "Wells and Cisterns" in Scribner for September, with plans showing how they are constructed, and how they should be constructed. He says of wells: First, of course, the well must be so constructed that it cannot act as a drain for the neighboring soil. This can be done by making the wall above low-water mark of some material impervious to water, or by omitting this part of the wall altogether. The first can be accomplished by having the wall from a point two or three feet from the bottom made of brick with a coat of hydraulic cement on its exterior, or of hydraulic well-tubing with the jointings well protected with cement; in either case the earth should be thoroughly packed around the wall, and a slight embankment should be made around the orifice to prevent the in-flow of surface or storm water.

In such a well the draining surface is so reduced, and placed at such a distance below the surface of the ground, that in the great majority of instances the introduction of foreign matter becomes impossible, except in so far as there is a chance that substances will fall into the well from above. To prevent this the well should be covered when not in use. In most cases, however, it is better to omit the upper part of the well altogether. After the excavation is completed, the wall can be built in the usual manner for a distance of two or three feet, more or less, as circumstances may demand; the service pipe can then be placed in position, and the well arched over. The remainder of the excavation can then be filled with earth, well packed as it is thrown in, and the pipe carried to any convenient point. It will be necessary to place above the arch several layers of stones successively smaller to prevent the falling of earth into the space below.

The workmen will probably suggest a layer of turf or straw to accomplish this object, but the presence of either of these substances will cause the water to be unpleasant for a considerable time, and will prove the cause of much annoyance.

There is a prevalent notion that a well should be ventilated for the purpose of allowing noxious gases to escape; and that water is better for being exposed to the air. I hardly need state that the only noxious gases in a well (i. e., gases which render the water unwholesome) are the products of the decomposition of organic matter which has found its way into the well in ways which have been described above, and that water as it flows in its subterranean passages is more perfectly aerated than it can be in any other way.

Do Cows Eat in Proportion to Weight?

At the St. Lawrence Dairyman's Association, Gen. Curtis made the point in favor of the Shorthorn cow, that she was such a perfect digester of food that she did not eat as much in proportion to size and yield of milk, as the Ayrshire of Jersey. Mr. Rutherford believed this opinion to be quite a mistaken one, and that the Jersey consumed less food, proportionally to size and yield of milk, than the best milking Shorthorns. Prof. Arnold was inclined to think Gen. Curtis's opinion correct. In corroboration of the latter opinion, Mr. E. W. Stewart related two experiments of his own. One was with two merino sheep, together weighing 20 lbs., fed in comparison with a Cotswold sheep weighing a little over 200 lbs. These sheep were fed in separate pens, for 80 days, upon hay and corn. The two merinos ate 5 lbs. of hay and two quarts of corn per day, while Cotswold ate only 4 lbs. of hay and 3 pints of corn; and the Cotswold gained a fraction of a pound the most, while eating 25 per cent. less. He also tried a similar experiment with three small, common cows, weighing 800 lbs. each, and two large cows, weighing 1,200 lbs. each; so that the weight of each cow was Getting a Drink in Maine.

HOW THE LAW IS INVADED BY DR. DOW'S THIRTY FELLOW-CITIZEN'S.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 8. - Residents of this city smile when the read Neal Dow's assertion that the sale of liquor is practically unknown in Maine. Though familiar with this State for years, and, of course, with the various trials of license and prohibitory laws within its borders, I have never seen in it a greater consumption of intoxicating drinks than now.

Arriving here a few days ago, I at once visited my old friend B. in his office. There were several persons present, and the first cordial greetings were hardly over when B. wrote a few words on a slip of paper, and handed it to me with an air of mystery. I took it and read, "Would you like to have a glass of lager?" I had begun to answer, "Well, I don't care," when a gesture warned me to be silent, and I wrote on a slip "Yes." He then invited me into a back room, to see his new drink. Once there, he said, "I don't want those fellows to know," and led the way down a flight of stairs into the cellar where, at the further end, we found a case of bottled lager.

From B. I afterward obtained the following fact: - Although the law in regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors is not openly defied, save in a few isolated cases, the evasions are so many, and ingenious that a great deal of liquor is actually sold within the State. One of the most famous of these evasions is the "egg-dodge." This consists in making two small apertures in the shell, blowing the contents from it and filling the empty case with prime old whiskey. The holes are neatly sealed with white paper, and these eggs sell readily at $1.50 per dozen.

Another plan, successfully practised for several months until it was finally discovered by the sharp-nosed detectives, was the "faucet dodge." An innocent looking cider or vinegar barrel is furnished with what appears to be an ordinary wooden faucet, from which, when turned in one direction, there flows cider or vinegar; but if it is turned the other way, there gushes forth a stream of foaming, brown ale. One ingenious evader improved upon this method by connecting a barrel of ale, placed in another room, with his Sebago water pipes, and serving his customers, according to their appearance, with Frank Jones' ale or Adam's.

A saloon in the lower part of the town baffled the officers for a long time. They were certain that liquor was sold there, but could discover nothing more criminating about the premises than empty casks and bottles. At last one of them cast a suspicious eye on the high shelf, upon which lay, flat on their sides, a quantity of corkless and, apparently, empty flasks. Mounting to this he discovered that each flask contained brandy or whiskey in such quantity that it just failed to run from the uncorked neck.

Bottles of "patent ginger beer," of which two contained alcohol equal to a bottle of whiskey, had a ready sale for months.

In Portland there are a great number of small clubs, of from a dozen to twenty members each, formed for the express purpose of drinking. Each member pays a small weekly fee, and receives a certain number of tickets. A room is hired, near the express office if possible, and liquor, generally beer, is sent there in bulk from Portsmouth or Boston. Each of the tickets held by members is good for one drink, but none of the liquor is sold.

The express companies are doing an immense business in the transportation of packages of liquor between Boston and Portland. The Portland agents of the Eastern Express Company told me that they received on an average a car load of liquor per day from Boston. It is

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum - or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible - Rubber, and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, is full of electricity, and when combined with the pure medicinal gums, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOULOUREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive, and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SPINE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a GOOD OF long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long seated Consumption.

did not eat as much in proportion to size and yield of milk, as the Ayrshire of Jersey. Mr. Rutherford believed this opinion to be quite a mistaken one, and that the Jersey consumed less food, proportionally to size and yield of milk, than the best milking Shorthorns. Prof. Arnold was inclined to think Gen. Curtis's opinion correct. In corroboration of the latter opinion, Mr. E. W. Stewart related two experiments of his own. One was with two merino sheep, together weighing 20 lbs., fed in comparison with a Cotswold sheep weighing a little over 200 lbs. These sheep were fed in separate pens, for 80 days, upon hay and corn. The two merinos ate 5 lbs. of hay and two quarts of corn per day, while Cotswold ate only 4 lbs. of hay and 3 pints of corn; and the Cotswold gained a fraction of a pound the most, while eating 25 per cent. less. He also tried a similar experiment with three small, common cows, weighing 800 lbs. each, and two large cows, weighing 1,200 lbs. each; so that the weight of each lot was equal. The experiment was made in the winter, all the cows being dry. They were all fed on mixed clover and timothy hay, cut five-eighths of an inch long, with two quarts of bran mixed with each bushel of cut hay. The feed was weighed as given to each lot, and supplied ad libitum. During 30 days the three small cows ate, on the average, 70 lbs. per day, and the large cows 60 lbs. per day. At the end of the experiment, the three small cows had gained 65 lbs., and the two large cows 62 pounds. Here was a difference in food in favor of the large animal of 16.8 per cent. The cows were all apparently, in the same condition at the beginning. It is the general opinion that animals eat in proportion to weight; but this will not apply to cases where the difference in weight is very large. In the case of the two merino sheep that weighed the same as one Cotswold, there is the heat of two systems to be kept up, instead of one. The respiratory food is not in proportion to size of animal, as the lungs of the two small sheep were, combined, larger than those of one large sheep, and would take more food to keep up animal heat. The outside surface of the bodies of two small animals having only the weight of one large animal is much greater, and the radiation of heat from this large surface will be proportionally greater, and require so much additional food. This appears to be a rational explanation of the facts of these two experiments, and which have been observed, in a general way, by many feeders.—N. Y. Sun.

Fruit as a Medicine

The importance to health of eating plenty of fresh, ripe fruit at this season cannot be too strongly argued. Not imported tropical products, but the fruit of our own climate. Not green or rotten fruit. All the patent pills and half the physicians' prescriptions for average human indisposition, are for one single purpose—to drain the system of dead and injurious matter. Headache, dullness, sluggishness, fever, and two-thirds of the symptoms which precede disease, have their origin in imperfect human drainage. With a very large proportion of people, a certain consumption of ripe fruit will regulate this economy. It is better than any pill, for the action so induced is regular and constant in proportion to the supply. At best, the action of any drug is spasmodic. It is only a choice between two evils. Fruit is a food and medicine also recommended by the palate. It nourishes and cleanses. Yet thousands of people live on year after year whose daily experience is that of "not feeling very well," whose trouble is more or less constipation. The burden of their diet is meats, salt and fresh bread, and potatoes. Thus they go on perpetuating their misery and ignorant of the simple remedy within their reach. Or to effect the necessary action they use citrate pills, aperients, and, occasionally, when extra stoppage with all its disagreeable symptoms occurs, a dose of salts and senna, rhubarb or "blue mass." Of course a long neglect of the clogged-up system render such re-failed to run from the uncorked neck.

Bottles of "patent ginger beer," of which two contained alcohol equal to a bottle of whiskey, had a ready sale for months.

In Portland there are a great number of small clubs, of from a dozen to twenty members each, formed for the express purpose of drinking. Each member pays a small weekly fee, and receives a certain number of tickets. A room is hired, near the express office if possible, and liquor, generally beer, is sent there in bulk from Portsmouth or Boston. Each of the tickets held by members is good for one drink, but none of the liquor is sold.

The express companies are doing an immense business in the transportation of packages of liquor between Boston and Portland. The Portland agents of the Eastern Express Company told me that they received on an average a car load of liquor per day from Boston. It is dangerous, however, for them to deliver packages C. O. D., as Judge Clifford decides that an express agent thus becomes an agent of the dealer, and that liquor thus delivered is sold within the State.

So stringent is the law that apothecaries are no longer allowed to sell alcohol for medical purposes even when it is ordered by a physician. This has so seriously inconvenienced them that every druggist and apothecary in Maine has bound himself to support only such candidates for the State Legislature as shall favour the passage of a bill, to be presented this coming winter, removing this restriction. This bill, if passed, will allow them to dispense any medicine mentioned in the United States pharmacopoeia. It passed one branch of the Legislature last winter, and was in a fair way to pass the other, when some prohibitionist caused it to be amended with the words, "Except such as shall contain alcohol."

The bills of fair at hotels and restaurants, instead of the usual wine list on the last page, contain copies of the State liquor laws. A stranger finds it almost impossible to obtain even a bottle of Bass at a hotel; but to the initiated nothing is more simple. He has merely to register, engage a room, and in it call for what he likes. The bill is for room rent. In some places beer is given away, but crackers sell for ten apiece.

The Cumberland Club, of Portland, is one of the most comfortable and elegant in the country, but in it no liquor is sold, and none appears on the dinner table unless brought from their private stores by members. In the club house, however, there is a small upper room, furnished and ornamented with tiers of lockers, of one of which each member, if he so desires, holds the key. When this club was founded, last May, one of the members remarked:—"It now remains to be seen how long a dry club will float."

Besides depriving the State of one of its principal sources of revenue, the Maine liquor law has already driven from it a vast amount of business that will never return. In certain cases it increases drunkenness, from the fact that men will seek to do that which they are forbidden. Much of the liquor that is sold within the State—and at high prices, too—is of the poorest quality, and productive of the worst effects. A higher premium than ever is put upon smuggling, and the number of illicit stills is on the increase. A large brewery near Portland, in which many men were employed, is closed; the men are thrown out of work, and the vast stores of malt accumulated there are being shipped to Portsmouth.

The beer gardens are closed, and no other places of entertainment of equal attractiveness have been provided.

There are 1,200 names on the Rine roll in St. Thomas.

Montreal volunteer pay lists have been sent to Ottawa.

Tenements are being put up in St. John as a speculation.

Of course a long neglect of the clogged-up system render such remedies imperatively necessary. The range of fruit is large. Apples, pears, peaches, berries of various sorts, prunes, and all of these dried for winter consumption. Try this remedy. Cut loose from doses, doctors, citrates and pills. Study the working of your own system. No doctor can do this for you. It is your own house, and you should know best how to take care of it. Don't despise allusions to these plain, homely facts. Your strength of body and mind, cheerfulness of temper and clearness of head, your skill in doing business, driving bargains and making money, all depend very much in keeping the drainage of the system in as perfect a condition as possible. Napoleon attributed the loss of his first battle to a clogged stomach. Many a man has failed at the trying hour because his blood was clogged with impurities. When blood is one-third dead matter, the man or woman is also one-third dead. Moral courage, confidence, decision, wit presence of mind, good address, powerful magnetic influence, and the right word and action at the right time and place, depend for their force, vigor and presence very much on proper bodily conditions.—*N. They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Agents even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long seated Consumption.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, effectual and permanent, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

It was rather late in morning—for the country, I mean. Treddock had also some arrears of make up, and I had nearly dressed when he looked in at my room door. The constable was awaiting us below in very highest possible condition of satisfaction, and was only lingering to receive my friend's congratulations (something more substantial, I be added), before setting off for the village, having, as he confidently intimated, effected everything up, though, so far as explanation went, things were really as much a mystery as ever. Nothing further had occurred; that was all that he said. But in our content at this one was overlong; all seemed only anxious to conclude that the strange fair had ended; and everybody indignantly praised the old man, as if he really been in some way the cause of Cheeking loudly as he went, he too leave; and Treddock and I, with lady of the household, who had now led us, sat down to breakfast in the temper. Some ten minutes elapsed, we were discussing the incident of the hunt of yesterday, when a yelp about arose underneath the window where he sat, and a dirty hand, beating on the casement outside, so clearly that a diamond pane shivered of its lead casing, and tinkled as it fell in Mrs. Treddock gave a scream, and, clenching the child to her bosom, "Hoo, mestur!" cried a lad's terrible voice, as Treddock flung open the door, "th' constable is done fur; th' killed him back of th' little bean sta."

This was awful. Treddock and I ed out at the front, and made for a of bean-stacks which stood in a near ner of the yard, round the east gable far from the dog-kennel. Stretched the ground, lay the poor old const his head and shoulders resting in a pool of blood, the haggard face tu upwards, looking as though he were dead. Upon our raising him, we f that he still breathed, but his inj were evidently frightful, and most egerous; and, as had happened in al other cases the wounds had been inf on the head, and had the appeara being done by a blunt weapon. Treddock shouted loudly for some one to a chair for the better carrying of the jured man; and in the meantime we ported him in a sitting posture as we could. I noticed that Treddock eyes were attracted over my shou towards some object as we knelt.

"Look there!" he said in a ho whisper—"that mare has seen it d Whoever it is, she knows them. (she was but a Christian!"

I turned my head and looked. I was the black mare on the other side a little low fence not two yards a protruding her head over, her nostril lating, and her eyes glaring in the w fear; while we could see through pales that the terrified creature trem in every limb. But the next minut household was clustering around us; was it greatly to be wondered at that women screamed and the men tu pale at the ghastly spectacle we ca through their midst. Several of t scarcely ten minutes before, had seer old man jauntily set off for home in health and strength. A servant was stantly despatched on the master's l for the nearest surgeon, but he unfi nately lived a couple of miles as We laid the poor constable on the kit heart, propping him with pillows, tried to stanch the bleeding with cl.

"Ellen, you and the baby must this house at once," said Treddock, ing his face, now pale enough toward wife. "The place is bewitched, and s

CHAPTER II.—THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CONCLUDED.

"Dogs are of no use when there are no footprints," he vaguely said to me, as I strolled away on our return walk; and it was easy to see that although, in talking with the villagers, he had pretended to believe that it was all over, he still had a secret misgiving that the end of the disasters had not yet been reached. This conviction was clearly brought out, when in our chat on the hearth that night, he suggested to his wife that she and the baby should go away by rail on the following morning to her mother's, some sixty miles away, and should remain there for a few days. Mrs. Nelly, however, indignantly scouted the idea of such a thing, when they had a guest in the house; and baby reassuringly crowded doxies at all dangers. The plan seemed to break down at the outset; still, Treddock was not contented. The constable had been set at liberty for further attendance immediately upon our return; but he was determined, he valorously said, to make a thing will happen you. Go, and get you ready," he urged, his voice shaking; "we shall have the county police here now, knocking human beings on the head as different to killing cows, and sheep, and dogs. If he dies, there'll have to be an inquest held."

Mrs. Treddock nugged her child to her breast, while she bent over the injured man; but she answered that she should not go away, unless Treddock went with her; everybody she said had better go, and leave the place to itself. The servants, short as the time was, were already acting upon that conviction; some were bringing boxes down stairs, and one or two had got their bonnets on. This last horrible affair, occurring in broad day, had broken down the courage of everybody, and the whole premises had instantly been thrown into confusion, no one daring to venture now from one room into another alone. Meanwhile the constable continued to breathe, and more heavily; now and then he tossed about his arms, and he seemed to be quite unconscious. Very shortly people came hurrying up from the village, the man sent for the doctor having told them the startling news as he passed through. The house was filled with persons quickly. I suggested that the police should be sent for from the county town, and Treddock assenting, a second messenger was ordered to saddle the black mare, and hurry away on this errand, with a whispered injunction from me, at which he gave me a puzzled stare, not on any account to touch the animals ears unless he wanted a tumble. The man, a few minutes afterwards, shouted in at the kitchen door that the mare had got loose in the upper field, and would not let a dozen of them catch her. He was angrily bade to take one of the cart-horses. By and by, though the interval seemed cruelly long, the surgeon arrived, and after a hasty examination, he pronounced that the constable's head was fractured in two places. In answer to a question from Treddock, he said that, as far as he could judge, the blows had been struck with a dull-edged metal instrument. Under the doctor's directions, the old man was removed to a couch in another room, which could be kept free from intruders; for by this time the crowd had about taken possession of the whole place, neither Treddock nor his wife seeming greatly to object to it. The presence of the crowd appeared to give something like a sense of security, or at least mitigated the feeling of danger. My big, strong friend stood with a pallid face amidst the mob of his male neighbors; and Mrs. Treddock, with her frightened child, made another centre for the mingling circle of women. Occasionally, Treddock would turn to me, and in a mechanical way, express his hope for the arrival of the police; but the mystery was to be explained without their aid, and, as fate would have it, I had a principal part to play in the solution. Treddock, after making another effort, finally succeeded, by the aid of the chousing women, in persuading his wife to take the child away from the scene.

I should have mentioned that the doctor had two patients to attend to at the Grange for several days; Mrs. Treddock's brain had, in another way, received a shock nearly as severe as that sustained by the constable. By and by, she recovered, taking much longer time, however than did Master Charlie to rally from his rough ill-usage. Both parents expressed a firm belief that my visit to the Grange had been owing to providential arrangement, and seemed much to regret that baby had already a godfather. Things very shortly settled down in a quiet state; and after all, I did not return to town before I had had other sport than that of shooting horses, and if the process was less exciting, it was far more pleasant.

The old constable, by the time he had gathered a little strength, had fully persuaded himself that it was he who had hit on the first clue to the mysterious depredator being the mare, from his saying that the house-window, which was smashed in in the early morning, had been broken by two somethings which struck simultaneous blows, for by that, he now asseverated, he distinctly meant to convey the notion of horses' feet!

The evening wore quietly on, and after supper time a bed of a make-shift kind was made up for the constable in the kitchen, and again the stable and the corn-loft had each a guardian occupant. Treddock, as gravely as before, brought the yeomanry carbine to my chamber, and then marched off with the other double-barrelled weapon to his own room. The moonlight poured in through the small panes of my window, making a net work of shadows on the curtains, which I lay admiringly watching for some time; but following the hands in the morning is not conducive to wakefulness at night, and when I again opened my eyes, though the window was equally bright, I could distinguish that at this time the rays were those of the sun. Treddock, after making another effort, finally succeeded, by the aid of the chorusing women, in persuading his wife to take the child away from the grange down into the village. She went up stairs for her own bonnet and shawl, and for Master Charlie's hat, and was shortly fully dressed and ready to start. A big servant girl had the baby in her arms, and after he had received the father's showers of kisses, she set off with him in advance of her mistress, who turned back for another little fit of hysterical sobbing on Treddock's broad shoulder.

Instantly everybody was pouring pell-mell through the doorway, but Tom Treddock's fists, striking right and left in sudden fury, made for himself the foremost way, his poor, stark-mad wife, however, keeping a dragging hold of him. But once outside, everybody came to a sudden standstill; the parents stopped transfixed with terror, like every one else. On the other side of a small pond, just below the house, to the left, and through which she must have rushed, stood the infernal mare, with the child hanging from its jaws, held up by the clothes; and just as we all got sight of her, she ducked her head, and dipped the struggling infant under the water, clearly bodily into the pond! Some men who had been hastening towards her, stopped rooted at this manoeuvre, and lifting her head the she-devil stood at bay, white streams of vapor escaping from her nostrils, and her eyes blazing blood-red. With a ringing shriek, Mrs. Treddock rushed towards towards the pond, and Tom followed her, but once more the devilish creature ducked her head, and plunged the child into the muddy, choking water. The mother fell headlong, and the father stiffened where he checked himself, with his big, helpless arms upraised, while everybody else remained motionless, fascinated with horror. One old woman alone had presence of mind, which afterwards shamed all the rest; she rushed back into the house, and a moment later she thrust a gun into my hands, I happened to be nearest. This broke the spell. I ran for the pond, a wild cry going up from every quarter at the sight of my weapon. The hoarse eyes of the mare met mine, and again she dropped the child towards the water; but in doing so she exposed her neck, and I fired for the junction of the shoulder blade. Although a sort of darkness in simultaneously blinded my eyes, I saw through it that the black mare fell at the edge of the water where she had stood, and that the child floated loose, a white speck on the surface of the pond. A moment later the child was picked up.

I should have mentioned that the doctor had two patients to attend to at the Grange for several days; Mrs. Treddock's brain had, in another way, received shock nearly as severe as that sustained by the constable. By and by, she recovered, taking much longer time, however, than did Master Charlie to rally from his rough ill-usage. Both parents expressed a firm belief that my visit to the Grange had been owing to providential arrangement, and seemed much to regret that baby had already a godfather. They very shortly settled down in a quiet state; and after all, I did not return to town before I had had other sport than that of shooting horses, and if the process was less exciting, it was far more pleasant.

The old constable, by the time he had gathered a little strength, had fully persuaded himself that it was he who had hit on the first clue to the mysterious delinquent being the mare, from his saying that the house-window, which was smashed in in the early morning, had been broken by two somethings which struck simultaneously blows, for by that, he now ascertained, he distinctly meant to convey the notion of horses' feet!

THE DEVIL FISH

Victor Hugo's Mythical Monster. Reality in Canadian Waters.

AN IMMENSE DEVIL FISH CAUGHT OFF THE COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

HOW THE ANIMAL WAS CAPTURED.

There is great excitement here at present over the exhibition of a splendid specimen of the gigantic cuttle-fish, commonly called devil-fish. Only one complete specimen of this extraordinary animal was ever previously secured—in 1871, when your correspondent was able to obtain a perfect specimen taken in Logi Bay and to forward it to Professor Verill, of Yale College, who made an exhaustive study of it and described it in various scientific periodicals. It is now to be seen in the Peabody Museum, New Haven. The capture and the animal were described at length and exclusively in the World at the time, and made the greatest sensation in scientific circles as well as among newspaper readers in both hemispheres. The one which I have now to describe is a much larger and finer specimen, being 40 feet from the extremity of the long arms to the point of the tail. On the 22nd instant a heavy equinoctial gale swept these shores, and the wanderer of the deep was driven ashore in an exhausted condition at Catalina, in the northern shore of Trinity Bay. When stranded it was still alive, but died soon after the ebb of the tide, which left it high and dry on the beach. Two fisherman took possession of the "treasure-trove," and the whole settlement gathered to gaze in astonishment at the monster. Formerly this "big squid" as the fishermen call it, would have been covered up to manure by the fishermen; or even as food for the dogs; but now, thanks to the diffusion of intelligence, there were some in Catalina who knew the importance of preserving such a rarity, and who advised the fishermen to take it at once to St. John's. The two men loaded their little craft with the body of the gigantic cuttle, and arrived with it here on the 26th in a perfectly fresh condition. As soon as the news spread an eager desire to view the monster was awakened, and the fishermen were advised to exhibit it before the public. The Government granted the use of the drill shed for the purpose, and on the floor, supported by boards, the creature was laid out in all its gigantic proportions. The lucky fishermen reaped a golden harvest and found the big squid by far the best catch they had ever made.

ly as before, brought the yeomanry carbine to my chamber, and then marched off with the other double-barrelled weapon to his own room. The moonlight poured in through the small panes of my window, making a net work of shadows on the curtains, which I lay admiringly watching for some time; but following the hands in the morning is not conducive to wakefulness at night, and when I again opened my eyes, though the window was equally bright, I could distinguish that at this time the rays were those of the sun. It was rather late in the morning—for the country, I mean; but Treddock had also some arrears of rest to make up, and I had nearly dressed when he looked in at my room door. The old constable was awaiting us below in the very highest possible condition of self-satisfaction, and was only lingering to receive my friend's congratulations (with something more substantial, I believe added), before setting off for the village, having, as he confidently intimated, cleared everything up, though, so far as any explanation went, things were really left as much a mystery as ever. Nothing further had occurred; that was all that could be said. But in our content at this, no one was overlogical; all seemed only too anxious to conclude that the strange affair had ended; and everybody indefinitely praised the old man, as if he had really been in some way the cause of it. Chukking loudly as he went, he took his leave; and Treddock and I, with the lady of the household, who had now joined us, set down to breakfast in the best of temper. Some ten minutes elapsed, and we were rediscussing the incidents of the hunt of yesterday, when a yelping sound arose underneath the window near where he sat, and a dirty hand came beating on the casement outside, so fiercely that a diamond pane shivered out of its lead casing, and tinkled as it fell inside.

Mrs. Treddock gave a scream, and nervously clutched the child to her bosom.

"Hoo, mestur!" cried a lad's terrified voice, as Treddock flung open the window, "th' constable is done fur; they've killed him back o' the little bean stack."

This was awful. Treddock and I rushed out at the front, and made for a couple of bean-stacks which stood in a near corner of the yard, round the east gable, not far from the dog-kennel. Stretched upon the ground, lay the poor old constable, his head and shoulders resting in a little pool of blood, the haggard face turned upwards, looking as though he were quite dead. Upon our raising him, we found that he still breathed, but his injuries were evidently frightful, and most dangerous; and, as had happened in all the other cases the wounds had been inflicted on the head, and had the appearance of being done by a blunt weapon. Treddock shouted loudly for some one to bring a chair for the better carrying of the injured man; and in the meantime we supported him in a sitting posture as well as we could. I noticed that Treddock's eyes were attracted over my shoulder towards some object as we knelt.

"Look there!" he said in a hollow whisper—"that mare has seen it done! Whoever it is, she knows them. Oh, if she was but a Christian!"

I turned my head and looked. There was the black mare on the other side of a little low fence not two yards away, protruding her head over, her nostrils dilating, and her eyes glaring in the wildest fear; while we could see through the pales that the terrified creature trembled in every limb. But the next minute the household was clustering around us; nor was it greatly to be wondered at that the women screamed and the men turned pale at the ghastly spectacle we carried through their midst. Several of them scarcely ten minutes before, had seen the old man jauntily set off for home in good health and strength. A servant was instantly despatched on the master's horse for the nearest surgeon, but he unfortunately lived a couple of miles away. We laid the poor constable on the kitchen hearth, propping him with pillows, and tried to stanch the bleeding with cloths.

"Ellen, you and the baby must quit this house at once," said Treddock, turning his face, now pale enough toward his wife. "The place is bewitched, and some-little fit of hysterical sobbing on Treddock's broad shoulder.

"The black mare—the black mare!" was the next moment yelled in a score of terrified voices, and a clatter of hoofs dashed past the front door. "She has got the child!" next struck our ears in horror.

Instantly everybody was pouring pell-mell through the doorway, but Tom Treddock's fists, striking right and left in sudden fury, made for himself the foremost way, his poor, stark-mad wife, however, keeping a dragging hold of him. But once outside, everybody came to a sudden standstill; the parents stopped transfixed with terror, like every one else. The mother fell headlong, and the rather stiffened where he checked himself, with his big, helpless arms up raised, while everybody else remained motionless, fascinated with horror. One old woman alone had presence of mind, which afterwards shamed all the rest; she rushed back into the house, and a moment later she thrust a gun into my hands, I happened to be nearest. This broke the spell. I ran for the pond, a wild cry going up from every quarter at the sight of my weapon. The hellish eyes of the mare met mine, and again she dropped the child towards the water; but in doing so she exposed her neck, and I fired for the junction of the shoulder blade. Although a sort of darkness instantaneously blinded my eyes, I saw through it that the black mare fell at the edge of the water where she had stood, and that the child floated loose, a white speck on the surface of the pond. A moment later, the fiend in hide and hoofs was dead, and the half-drowned infant was rescued, but not an instant too soon. Tom Treddock staggered to me, but in the act of grasping my hand, tumbled into the arms of those around him; the big, stout-hearted fellow had swooned, just as his wife had already done, and as I was within the toss of a straw of doing the next moment. What the historic William Tell's sensation must have been, immediately after that famous archery feat, I still do not pretend to know, for Charlie Treddock was no child of mine; but if the Bowman on that occasion had happened to be not the father himself, but only a friend of his, I think I have some idea of what his feeling was, and I beg to say it was not a pleasant one.

Matters were at last cleared up. It was the mare which had done all the mischief, and this last horrid act was only the climax which had disclosed the mystery. The men who had been helping to catch her in the field kept on in their efforts after the wagoner gave up, and started upon his errand upon another horse, and just as her pursuers had succeeded in driving her towards the house, the servant girl had gone out of doors with the child. She explained that she had put the infant down to his feet on the ground, where he propped himself against a sunny wall, while she arranged her shawl; and at that instant, the devil-possessed brute swooped him up in her jaws, and carried him off to the pond in the sight of a score of eyes. It was no less clear, strange as it at first seemed, that the mare had done all the rest of the horrible mischief. As she lay there part in the water and part out, blood-stains, which the water seemed to have freshened into recent patches, were discovered on both the hoofs of her fore-feet. Her iron shoes were unquestionably the instruments which had in-

DESCRIPTION OF THE HIDEOUS MONSTER

When taken from the water the color of the squid was a dusky red but that had disappeared, and the body and arms are now perfectly white. There is the usual horny beak, the parrot-like mandibles of a dark bony substance, and placed on the under side of the head equidistant from the roots of the tentacles. The tongue is that of a snail, perhaps three inches in length, and coated with fine teeth. The stomach can be seen through the vents in the palpy bag which covers it, and a few bits of thin brown bone, the remnants of the gills can be pulled out to view by any body who cares to introduce his hand into the cavity of the head, which is a membranous bag in the centre of the mass and from which the ten arms radiate. Certainly the idea of being clutched in those terrible arms, from which there could be no escape when once they had closed, and then torn and rent by the formidable beak, is enough to send a shuddering thrill through the stoutest heart. Looking at this creature, one can understand that the wild tales told of Kraken and other great cuttles in the Indian seas, though greatly exaggerated, had very substantial foundation in fact. Posterior to the head were a pair of huge staring eyes, the sockets being eight inches in diameter. Their expression when the creature was alive on the beach is said by the fishermen to have been peculiarly ferocious. The Governor, Sir John Glover, visited it, and in all his lengthened experience in Africa he has seen nothing half so wonderful. It is very perishable, and in a very short time decomposition sets in and it can only be preserved in the strongest alcohol. On showmen could only continue the exhibition two days and a half. I manage to secure it at the close, and had it packed for transmission to Professors Baird and Verrill, who were fortunately in Halifax being in hopes, too—of which I used a ton in packing it—would preserve it.

flicted the constable's wounds; and they also had beaten out the brains of the dogs, and killed the sheep, and broken the legs of the cow, and bruised the head of Bob the cart-horse. It all grew as plain as daylight, for it was now discovered that, although no human footprints had been discovered near the spots where the strange scenes had occurred, there were always marks of horse-shoes there. Subsequently, I may as well say, the thing was proved by direct as well as this inferential evidence—the first words the old constable uttered, eleven days after receiving his injuries, were, that it was the black mare that attacked him immediately after he left the house.

The explanation finally gained, through the medium of the police, was this, that the black mare had been a "trick"-horse in a circus, and had been sold by them on account of her malice, having seriously injured several of those who performed with her. She had a knack, it was stated of untying herself from a halter, and could even unfasten a stable door. No doubt, she in that way got loose, and so had had, unknown to all, the run of the premises. How such an infernal spirit could ever come to possess a horse, is a question I shall not attempt to answer. The veterinary surgeon, professed entire ignorance of the matter, and asserted that the mare was only sent down to him from a distance for sale. He however, thought it consistent with his own interests to return to Tredlock the purchase money he had paid, and also to give the constable a sum of money.

I should have mentioned that the doctor had two patients to attend to at the Grange for several days; Mrs. Tredlock's brain had, in another way, received a shock nearly as severe as that sustained by the constable. By and by, she recovered, taking much longer time, however, than did Master Charlie to rally from his rough ill-usage. till it reached Halifax, finally to be placed either in the Peabody or Smithsonian Museum, but at the last moment the owner violated his contract and sold it to a later and higher bidder.

ITS IMMENSE SIZE AND STRENGTH.

I have carefully taken the measurement of the monster, and the following are the dimensions: The two long tentacles are each 30 feet: the body 10 feet in length, making the total length from the termination of the outstretched long arms to extremity of the tail 40 feet. The long tentacles are thin and tough as leather, being only 5 inches in circumference, except at the extremities, which broaden out and are 8 inches in circumference. The body at its thickest part is nearly 7 feet in circumference and terminates in a caudal fin 2 feet 9 inches across; there are eight short arms, which at the point of junction with the central mass are 17 inches in circumference, but at their extremities taper down to fine tougue-like points, having rows of powerful suckers along one side an inch in diameter at their broadened extremities. I tried to count these suckers on one arm, which is 11 feet in length, and made out 250, large and small; so that the eight arms must contain 2,000 suckers; the long arms perhaps 250 more. The head or central mass, from which the arms radiate, is 4½ feet in circumference. Unfortunately the delicate eyes had been destroyed on the voyage or in putting it on board; but the socket of one measured eight inches in diameter.

HOW IT TRAVELS IN ITS NATIVE ELEMENT.

The appearance of the animal when in the water is described by the fishermen as extraordinary. The tail had got fast on a rock as it was swimming backward, and it was rendered powerless. In its desperate efforts to escape, the ten arms darted about in all directions, lashing the water into foam, the thirty-foot tentacles in particular making lively play as it shot them out and endeavored to get a "purchase" with their powerful suckers, so as to drag itself into deep water. It was only when it became exhausted and the tide receded that the fishermen ventured to approach it. Its mode of moving through the water is remarkable. Behind the head on one side a tube or funnel is visible, which is connected with the bronchial or breathing organs. The water is admitted to these organs by valves, which allow it to enter on the muscular dilatation of the body; and when the water so admitted has communicated its oxygen to the blood it is expelled by this tube, just as in the case of fishes it is driven out at the gills. But then this effete water, after purifying the blood of the creature, is not merely got rid of, but is utilized so as to be subservient to the movements of the animal. By ejecting the water through the funnel with force it is, by the reaction of the surrounding medium, enabled to dart with amazing rapidity. This is its usual mode of locomotion, and nothing can surpass the ease and elegance of such movements. The body is just visible above the surface of the water; the funnel is at work below.

The Maple Fire.

When the autumn nights are dreary,
And the hearth is bright and cheery
With the maple's ruddy blaze,
Tender thoughts of other days
Come and go

As the flames each moment quicker
Leap and sparkle, curl and flicker, Forms of little children seem Dancing in the fire's gleam
To and fro

Chasing out the shadows more airy,
And in place of merry sprights
Mourning phantoms cross the light's
Dying glow.

Life is a dream, a glimmer
Of the hours of our summer,
And in place of merry sprights
Mourning phantoms cross the light's
Dying glow.

And the joys the soul remembers,
As the sparks across the embers
When the cheerful fire is done,
Steal and vanish one by one,
Sad and slow.

The Relations of Canada to the United States.

(Extract from Lord Dufferin's farewell speech at Winnipeg, Manitoba.)

Nothing struck me more on my way through St. Paul, in the United States, than the sympathetic manner in which the inhabitants of that flourishing city alluded to the progress and prospects of Canada and the North-west—(loud applause)—and on arriving here I was equally struck by finding even a more exuberant counterpart of those friendly sentiments. (Great applause.) The reason is not far to seek. Quite independently of the genial intercourse promoted by neighborhood and the intergrowth of commercial relations, a bond of sympathy between the two populations is created by the consciousness that they are both engaged in an enterprise of world-wide importance, that they are both organized corps in the ranks of humanity, and the wings of a great army marching in line on the level front; that they are both engaged in advancing the standards of civilization westwards, and that for many a year to come they will be associated in the task of converting the breadths of prairie that stretch between them and the setting sun into one vast paradise of international peace of domestic happiness, the material plenty, (Great cheering.) Between two communities thus occupied it is impossible but that amity and loving kindness should be begotten. (Applause.) But it will be asked, how can I, who am the natural and official guardian of Canada's virtue, mark with satisfaction such dangerously sentimental proclivities towards her seductive neighbor. I will reply by appeal to those experienced matrons and chaperones I see around me. They will tell you that when a young lady expressed her frank admiration for a man, when she welcomes his approach with unconstrained pleasure, crosses the room to sit beside him, presses him to join her picnic, praises him to her friends, there is not the slightest fear of her affections having been surreptitiously entrapped by the gay deceiver. (Loud laughter.) On the contrary, it is when she can be scarcely brought to mention his name—(great laughter)—when she alludes to him with malice and disparagement, that real danger is to be apprehended. (Renewed laughter.) No! No! Canada both loves and admires the United States, but it is with the friendly, frank affection which a heart whole steadily manifesting some big boisterous, hobble-dehoy of a cousin, fresh from school, and elate with animal spirits and good nature. She knows he is stronger and more muscular than herself, has lots of pocket money (laughter,) can smoke cigars and "loaf around" in public places in an ostentatious manner forbidden to the decorum of her own situation. (Uroarious laughter.) She admires him for his bigness, strength, and prosperity: she likes to hear of his punch-

the mare was only sent down to him from a distance for sale. He however, thought it consistent with his own interests to return to Treddock the purchase money he had paid, and also to give the constable a sum of money.

I should have mentioned that the doctor had two patients to attend to at the Grange for several days; Mrs. Treddock's brain had, in another way, received a shock nearly as severe as that sustained by the constable. By and by, she recovered, taking much longer time, however, than did Master Charlie to rally from his rough ill-usage. Both parents expressed a firm belief that my visit to the Grange had been owing to providential arrangement, and seemed much to regret that baby had already a godfather. Things very shortly settled down in a quieter state; and after all, I did not return to town before I had had other sport than that of shooting horses, and if the process was less exciting, it was far more pleasant.

The old constable, by the time he had gathered a little strength, had fully purchased himself that it was he who had hit on the first clue to the mysterious depredator being the mare, from his saying that the house-window, which was smashed in in the early morning, had been broken by two somethings which struck simultaneous blows, for by that, he now asseverated, he distinctly meant to convey the notion of horses' feet!

THE DEVIL FISH.

Victor Hugo's Mythical Monster, a Reality in Canadian Waters.

AN IMMENSE DEVIL FISH CAUGHT OFF THE COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

HOW THE ANIMAL WAS CAPTURED.

There is great excitement here at present over the exhibition of a splendid specimen of the gigantic cuttle-fish, commonly called devil-fish. Only one complete specimen of this extraordinary animal was ever previously secured—in 1873 when your correspondent was able to obtain a perfect specimen taken in Logie Bay and to forward it to Professor Verill, of Yale College, who made an exhaustive study of it and described it in various scientific periodicals. It is now to be seen in the Peabody Museum, New Haven. The capture and the animal were described at length and exclusively in the World at the time, and made the greatest sensation in scientific circles as well as among newspaper readers in both hemispheres. The one which I have now to describe is a much larger and finer specimen, being 40 feet from the extremity of the long arms to the point of the tail. On the 22nd instant a heavy equinoctial gale swept these shores, and this wanderer of the deep was driven ashore in an exhausted condition at Catalina, on the northern shore of Trinity Bay. When stranded it was still alive, but died soon after the ebb of the tide, which left it high and dry on the beach. Two fishermen took possession of the "treasure trove," and the whole settlement gathered to gaze in astonishment at the monster. Formerly this "big squid" as the fishermen call it, would have been covered into manure by the fishermen; or cut up as food for the dogs; but now, thanks to the diffusion of intelligence, there were some in Catalina who knew the importance of preserving such a rarity, and who advised the fishermen to take it at once to St. John's. The two men loaded their little craft with the body of the gigantic cuttle, and arrived with it here on the 26th in a perfectly fresh condition. As soon as the news spread, the eager desire to view the monster was awakened, and the fishermen were advised to exhibit it before the public. The Government granted the use of the drill shed for the purpose, and on the floor, supported by boards, the creature was laid out in all its gigantic proportions. The lucky fishermen reaped a golden harvest and found the big squid by far the best catch they the head of central mass, from which the arms radiate, is 4½ feet in circumference. Unfortunately the delicate eyes had been destroyed on the voyage or in putting it on board; but the socket of one measured eight inches in diameter.

HOW IT TRAVELS IN ITS NATIVE ELEMENT.

The appearance of the animal when in the water is described by the fishermen as extraordinary. The tail had got fast on a rock as it was swimming backward, and it was rendered powerless. In its desperate efforts to escape, the ten arms darted about in all directions, lashing the water into foam, the thirty-foot tentacles in particular making lively play as it shot them out and endeavored to get a "purchase" with their powerful suckers, so as to drag itself into deep water. It was only when it became exhausted and the tide receded that the fishermen ventured to approach it. Its mode of moving through the water is remarkable. Behind the head on one side a tube or funnel is visible, which is connected with the bronchial or breathing organs. The water is admitted to these organs by valves, which allow it to enter on the muscular dilatation of the body; and when the water so admitted has communicated its oxygen to the blood it is expelled by this tube, just as in the case of fishes it is driven out at the gills. But then this effete water, after purifying the blood of the creature, is not merely got rid of, but is utilized so as to be subservient to the movements of the animal. By ejecting the water through the funnel with force it is, by the reaction of the surrounding medium, enabled to dart with amazing rapidity. This is its usual mode of locomotion, and nothing can surpass the ease and elegance of such movements. The body is just visible above the surface of the water; the funnel is at work below, like a hydraulic engine, ejecting the water, while the triangular fin which forms the tail acts the part of front rudder and directs the way. It also moves forward by means of the fin-like expansion sides of the expansions of the mantle. It can also use its arms and legs and crawl along the bottom of the sea with its head downwards. The backward motion, however, is that which is most graceful and natural in the giant squid. When moving through the water its arms are folded together.

NO ESCAPE FROM ITS TERRIBLE CLUTCHES.

The devil-fish is not a "sea vampire," as Hugo declares, but his frightful description of the process by which "the hydra incorporates itself with the man and the man becomes one with the hydra," is scarcely more appalling than the real manner of the victim's death. When grasping its prey it shoots out one of the long, lithe tentacles, which are endowed with a high degree of muscularity, and as quickly as a cat could lap her paw on a mouse the extremity of the arm covered with suckers seizes the object by the suckers, the pistons of which are quickly retracted and the sharp, denticulated edges are pressed with enormous force on the surface of the victim. Then the other arms twine around and grasp it, and from that corpse-like embrace there is no escape. Then the beak of the fish is brought in play, and the softer portion of the victim's body are torn out and crushed between the mandibles. There is no doubt the squid catches and swallows piecemeal the creatures within its reach which it considers edible. It is in the the highest order of the invertebrates. It has a rudimentary brain and clearly defined internal organs. Whether the fish can "hate," as Hugo would have us believe, can hardly be affirmed, but when irritated or alarmed for any reason the expression of its huge staring eyes is said on good authority to be peculiarly ferocious. Altogether, the gigantic cuttle-fish is the most wonderful of all the denizens of the great deep. In a future communication I shall furnish further particulars of this extraordinary creature.

Between two communities this occupied it is impossible but that amity and loving kindness should be begotten. (Applause.) But it will be asked, how can I, who am the natural and official guardian of Canada's virtue, mark with satisfaction such dangerously sentimental proclivities towards her seductive neighbor. I will reply by appeal to those experienced matrons and chaperones I see around me. They will tell you that when a young lady expressed her frank admiration for a man, when she welcomes his approach with unconstrained pleasure, crosses the room to sit beside him, presses him to join her picnic, praises him to her friends, there is not the slightest fear of her affections having been surreptitiously entrapped by the gay deceiver. (Loud laughter.) On the contrary, it is when she can be scarcely brought to mention his name—(great laughter)—when she alludes to him with malice and disparagement, that real danger is to be apprehended. (Renewed laughter.) No! No! Canada both loves and admires the United States, but it is with the friendly, frank affection which a heart-whole stately maiden feels for some big boisterous, hobble-dehoy of a cousin, fresh from school, and elate with animal spirits and good nature. She knows he is stronger and more muscular than herself, has lots of pocket money (laughter,) can smoke cigars and "loaf around" in public places in an ostentatious manner forbidden to the decorum of her own situation. (Uroarious laughter.) She admires him for his bigness, strength, and prosperity; she likes to hear of his punching the heads of other boys (laughter); she anticipates and will be proud of his future success in life, and both likes him and laughs at him for his affectionate loyal, though somewhat patronising but of no never connection does she dream, or does his bulky image for a moment disturb her virginal meditations. (Laughter.) In a world apart, secluded from all extraneous influences, nestling at the feet of her majestic mother, Canada dreams her dream, and forebodes her destiny—a dream of everbroadening harvests, multiplying towns and villages, and expanding pastures; of constitutional self-government and a confederated Empire; of page after page of honorable history, added as her contribution to the annals of the Mother Country and to the glories of the British race; of a perpetuation for all time upon this continent of that temperate and well-balanced system of Government which combines in one mighty whole, as the eternal possession of all Englishmen, the brilliant history and traditions of the past with the freest and most untrammelled liberty of action in future. (Tremendous cheers.)

Archbishop Bayley.

HOW HE RENOUNCED A NEW ENGLAND BELLE TO BECOME A PRIEST.

The death of the distinguished Catholic Archbishop of Baltimore recalls to the memory of some of those who remember him in his youth the romance of his early life. When he decided to leave the Episcopal ministry, for which he had been trained, and study for the priesthood, he made sacrifices that few men are called upon to endure.

He gave up at once not only his social position, but the great fortune which his uncle, Mr. James Roosevelt, after whom he was named, intended to bequeath him, and worst of all to some hearts, he renounced the woman whom he loved.

One of the most famous belles that New England ever produced was Miss Julia Beers, a daughter of Judge Beers, of Litchfield, Conn. During the first thirty years of this century the law school of Litchfield was considered the most distinguished institution of the kind in the country. It drew to this bleak New England village the young men of the best families throughout the country, and one of its most honored teachers was

DESCRIPTION OF THE HORRIBLE MONSTER.

When taken from the water the color of the squid was a dusky red but that has disappeared, and the body and arms are now perfectly white. There is the usual horny beak, the parrot-like mandibles of a dark bony substance, and placed on the under side of the head equidistant from the roots of the tentacles. The tongue is that of a snail, perhaps three inches in length, and coated with fine teeth. The stomach can be seen through the vents in the palpy bag which covers it, and a few bits of thin brown bone, the remnants of the gills can be pulled out to view by anybody who cares to introduce his hand into the cavity of the head, which is a membranous bag in the centre of the mass, and from which the ten arms radiate. Certainly the idea of being clutched in those terrible arms, from which there could be no escape when once they had closed, and then torn and rent by the formidable beak, is enough to send a shuddering thrill through the stoutest heart. Looking at this creature, one can understand that the wild tales told of Krakens and other great cuttles in the Indian seas, though greatly exaggerated, had a very substantial foundation in fact. Posterior to the head were a pair of huge staring eyes, the sockets being eight inches in diameter. Their expression, when the creature was alive on the beach is said by the fishermen to have been peculiarly ferocious. The Governor, Sir John Glover, visited it, and in all his lengthened experience in Africa he had seen nothing half so wonderful. It is very perishable, and in a very short time decomposition sets in and it can only be preserved in the strongest alcohol. Our showmen could only continue the exhibition two days and a half. I managed to secure it at the close, and had it packed for transmission to Professors Baird and Verrill, who were fortunately in Halifax, being in hopes ice—of which I used half a ton in packing it—would preserve it

It can also use its arms and legs and crawl along the bottom of the sea with its head downwards. The backward motion, however, is that which is most graceful and natural in the giant squid. When moving through the water its arms are folded together.

It was purchased for the proprietors of the New York Aquarium, where it will be at once placed upon exhibition.

Thirty-three schooners, most of them laden with brick, arrived at St. John, N. B., during the last four days.

During the first thirty years of this century the law school of Litchfield was considered the most distinguished institution of the kind in the country. It drew to this bleak New England village the young men of the best families throughout the country, and one of its most honored teachers was Judge Beers.

His daughter was a beautiful blonde of the rarest type, with waving hair of pale gold, large blue eyes, and a figure remarkable for its tall and slender grace. Added to these natural gifts, she possessed also a fine voice of remarkable power and compass, which she constantly improved by training, while her fine natural powers of mind were cultivated by every advantage of education, so that at twenty-five she was a woman of rare and remarkable fascination.

At this time, during a summer pleasure trip, she met the young Episcopal clergyman, and the two became engaged. The Rev. Mr. Bayley was at this period a strikingly handsome man, possessing qualities of heart and mind sure to endear him to those with whom he was brought in contact. They were, indeed, a remarkable man and woman who met in that long past summer, and she who had been indifferent to a hundred adorners, listened with pleasure to the addresses of a man who felt that until now he had never met a fitting mate.

But powerful as love might be in an organization like his, the honesty of religious conviction was still dearer to the heart of the young clergyman, and after his transference to Hagerstown, Md., where he met the present Cardinal McCloskey, Mr. Bayley resolved to become a Catholic priest. The decision was a death blow to Miss Beers. She herself, persuaded by her love, embraced the faith of the Church of Rome, and for a while took refuge in a convent.

This departure of one of society's ornaments to the gloom of a cloister produced a great sensation among the fashionable circles of that day, and when, after a brief period, she, under circumstances of peculiar romance, fled from the convent and returned to her friends, all sorts of speculations were set afloat. For a few years she led a life of retirement at her home in Litchfield, and then fell a victim to consumption and perhaps to a broken heart.

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S SIMCOE SPEECH.

WE give below an extract from the Finance Minister's speech at Simcoe on the 21st ult. Our readers will find it contains important facts regarding Sir John and his Tory colleagues; and these fellows may well expect—as they richly deserve—to be handled without gloves at the forthcoming meetings in Lennox next week. After explaining in a lucid and satisfactory manner the important financial questions of the day, Mr. CARTWRIGHT continues as follows:

plea that Sir John Macdonald put forward that it was owing to his influence that I held a seat in the Parliament of Canada. To resume, however. When I entered Parliament it turned out that I differed from Mr. Sandfield Macdonald on two or three important questions. I will not say who was right, it is enough to say that I held a different opinion. Well, shortly afterwards Mr. Sandfield Macdonald resigned, and Sir John Macdonald expected to be sent for by the Governor General. What action did I take under the circumstances? I knew perfectly well, as did others, that Sir John Macdonald was very unpopular in Ontario; I could not and never have been able to approve of his conduct from 1856 to 1862, as was the case with a great many men who went then and who are now supporting him. I knew also that there was no possible chance for him to form a Government which could endure for three months together, and I had a strong conviction of what our fate would be if, in 1864, we went to the people under Sir John A. Macdonald's leadership. Acting in common with some other gentlemen in the ranks of that party I went to Sir John Macdonald and said, "Whatever your abilities may be, we feel that we cannot approve of your conduct during the preceding years of your Administration, and we have come to tell you that we require you to stand aside, as Mr. George Brown stood aside, and allow Mr. Senator Campbell to try to form a Government." It is on record that Senator Campbell did try, but what is not on record is that Sir John Macdonald took care he should try in vain. I am bound to say, however, that Sir John admitted that he was very unpopular in Ontario, and that it was best that he should stand aside. I was afraid that Sir John was in too good a temper to be relied on; and shortly afterwards, when I found that Mr. Campbell could not form a Government, I understood where we were, and that my astute and crafty old acquaintance had us in a corner. Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was out; Mr. Campbell could not form a Government; and we had to take Sir John Macdonald as our alternative. We knew we were going to our political death; we knew dissolution meant destruction; but we thought we might as well die game, and I think my hon. friend the Premier can testify that we did die game. (Hear, hear, laughter and cheers.) Sir John Macdonald, as you may imagine, did not entertain the liveliest feelings of affection for the member for Lennox, who was chief in telling him that he was unpopular with the people of Ontario. That was the first act in the little drama. Then, most unexpectedly, came Confederation, and changed the whole condition of affairs. I was a decided supporter of Confederation so long as it was going on, and I gave my best support to Sir John Macdonald on these terms: He to behave himself better and attend to public business as he ought, or I would then and there withdraw my support and tell the House of Commons the reason why. Those who remember the session of 1866 will not require to be told the reason of that intimation. (Hear, hear.) By-and-by Sir John thought fit to take Sir Francis Hincks into the Government. Before, he knew I did not trust him implicitly; he knew I was a man likely to take my own course, one who would support him so long as I thought it right and proper to do so, but no longer. Things went on this way with one little tiff between him and me, caused by my audacity in intimating that if he did not attend more closely to public business, I should explain to the House the cause of his negligence. When he took that step, I notified him that I did not approve of it, and as he has admitted, after he took that gentleman in, I notified him that I purposed to withdraw my support for a reason right well known to Sir John Macdonald. Though I had not justified him, I had always excused him for his delinquencies during the earlier part of his career from 1856 to 1862.

To me he gave no reason for his withdrawal from the party, he simply said he could not support the Government that Sir Francis Hincks was brought into. What could I suppose? I had a right to draw the inference because he gave no other reason.

Sir, there was not a man in Canada who knew better than Sir John Macdonald did when he made his statement what my reason was for withdrawing my support. He had written to me; I have here his letter—a huge letter of six foolscap sheets, filled, from the "Dear Cartwright" with which he commences to the "Dear Cartwright" with which he closes, with a series of reasons why Sir Francis Hincks was likely to be accepted as a leader by the Reformers of Canada. Now, I entirely agree with Sir John Macdonald that all private correspondence should be held sacred, on one condition: that both parties to that correspondence shall continue to keep it sacred; but I say that was an infamous act for Sir John Macdonald to refer to my correspondence, and not to dare to publish the whole. (Hear, hear.) I say that when Sir John Macdonald brought a false and malicious charge against me he knew I had in my possession a letter of his convicting him of falsehood in bringing that charge, and that for him to dare to say that a man may make a false and malicious charge against another, and then say, "Although you have proof in my own handwriting that that charge is a false and malicious one, you must not use it because I marked it private"—I say that this is about as fine a specimen of thieves logic as I ever remember to have heard. (Hear, hear.) I do not intend, to-day at any rate, to inflict this long letter on you, but I will give you a synopsis of its contents, sparing the privatenames and reference which it contains; and if Sir John Macdonald impeaches the truthfulness of that synopsis, if he dares deny that I have stated truly what it contains, then I will publish the whole letter, and every man in Canada will then have an opportunity of judging for himself who speaks the truth. (Hear, and cheers.) It contains six mortal foolscap pages. The first page is chiefly devoted to Sir John's undying gratitude to the Reformers in Canada for having in 1855, and afterwards in 1864, put him where he was. It is to be wished that gratitude had borne a little better fruit. The second paragraph is devoted to a short description of my friend the Premier and Mr. Blake, with a very ingenious resumé of the reasons why he could not at that time put salt on their tails. (Loud laughter.) The third paragraph goes on to show in detail what "steeped to the lips in corruption" means, used from one public man to another, and that it is rather a complimentary phrase than otherwise. Then he goes on to dilate on "the advantages to the old Reformers of Canada of Sir Francis Hincks going into the Government, to deliver them from the tyranny of George Brown and THE GLOBE, and on the immense rally there would be around him—as in the general election of 1872, for instance. (Laughter.) Then follows a lecture on the best way to keep in power, which I think my honourable friend the Premier might take a lesson from. Then there is a general valedictory to myself, and a summary of the qualifications of Sir Francis Hincks. In truth, it is really a long argument to show that Sir Francis Hincks was a real Reform leader, and an unanswerable proof, in six pages, that Sir John, when he denied that I stated the exact fact when I said that I objected to Sir Francis Hincks because he was not a Reform leader, was making a statement precisely as valuable as when he told Lord Dufferin on his honour and his fealty as a sworn Minister of the Crown that he was absolutely innocent of all the things laid to his charge by my honourable friend the Postmaster-General. (Hear, hear.) Now, I will tell you the reason why I did not use that letter before. I wanted Sir John Macdonald to make that charge in the House of Commons, where there were men around who knew every incident and fact connected with

SIR JOHN INSULTS HIS JEWISH TUENTS.

Sir John Macdonald is never insulting a very large and noble class of the community — the Jews. Whenever he wishes to make a usually opprobrious comparison to them, and in a way we believe will resent when they have the opportunity. Only the other day at a public meeting when speaking of the Neebing purchase by the Government action he wished to characterize of the most flagrant trickery a party — he used the following words: "I will give you an example which we clip from the recent speech as given in the London Express, a journal that supports him: Neebing Hotel fraud in connection with the Kaminitisquia land job was referred to, and the speaker (I mentioned by the way that the newspapers were correct in their statement of the facts) of the structure. He said 'It was a Jew's razor; it was not made but to sell.'" On the floor of Parliament as well as on the stump, Sir John indulges in such sneers, which are less insulting and uncalled for than his manners are indeed pretty in his manner when he assumes to be the very party of Gentlemen. — Hamiltonian

What Ailed the Great Chi

It is a question which every attentive present at last Friday's debate should honestly ask himself: Is the great chieftain? It is a question which he should have answered. So much has been said in praise of Sir John A. Macdonald, the party of which he is the head, his qualifications as a public man and a distinguished statesman have been so extolled, that opponents as well as supporters were willing to concede him a high place on the roll of Canada's honoraries. And the laudations of the great man who had preceded him on the same high ground, the already high reputations of the large and respectable people who had gathered in the sections of the surrounding country to see and hear for themselves the Conservative chieftain. With one exception, the burden of all that was said was praise to Sir John A. Macdonald. Hon. William Macdougall alone was heard from playing the role of antagonist. At least Sir John was not always in the saddle; he found something else to do.

NAPANEE, OCT. 29th, 1877.

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S SIMCOE SPEECH.

We give below an extract from the Finance Minister's speech at Simcoe on the 21st ult. Our readers will find it contains important facts regarding Sir John and his Tory colleagues; and these fellows may well expect—as they richly deserve—to be handled without gloves at the forthcoming meetings in Lennox next week. After explaining in a lucid and satisfactory manner the important financial questions of the day, Mr. CARTWRIGHT continues as follows:

A LITTLE BIT OF SECRET POLITICAL HISTORY

Now you have listened with unexampled patience while I have been wading through these somewhat tedious arrays of figures. I thank you most heartily for the courtesy you have shown me, and now I have a question to ask of you—and remember I shall not complain in the least if you think you have had quite enough of me and desire to hear my honourable friend the Premier. I want to know before I sit down if you would like to hear a little morsel of secret political history? (Cries of "Yes," and "Hear, hear.") Whether you would like to know how it is that Sir John Macdonald entertains so much hate and animosity against an innocent and helpless Minister of Finance like myself? (Hear, hear, and cries of "Tell us that.") Now, Sir John Macdonald and his friends were good enough lately, at Napanee, to give me four whole hours of tolerably steady vituperation. I propose to take a fitting opportunity of dealing at some length with the whole of the charges; then made at present with your good will, I will give him about ten minutes, and deal with a certain special charge, which, I am informed, he levelled against me last year on this very ground, and perhaps in the hearing of many of you who are present to-day. Now, in order fully to understand the whole case, it will be necessary for me to ask you to go back as far as the year 1863. Those of you who pay attention to political matters will recollect that in that year there was a general election, and at that election I had the honour of being first returned to Parliament. The position of things was exceedingly peculiar. Sir John Macdonald had lost office in 1862; Mr. Sandfield Macdonald had taken office, and Mr. Sandfield Macdonald had gone to the electors in 1863 under very special circumstances. A large portion of his Cabinet had left him after he had secured the right to dissolve, and it was supposed a change had taken place in his policy; at all events great uncertainty was felt as to what course he would take. I came before the electors of my own county, asking them to elect me as a perfectly independent candidate. I said to them, "I don't know what course I shall take with respect to Mr. Sandfield Macdonald until I have heard his explanations in Parliament, and what his policy is. And with regard to Sir John Macdonald, I wish you to understand distinctly that I entirely disapprove, and will not be held responsible in any shape or form for, the conduct of that gentleman from 1856 to 1862, although in the present critical aspect of our affairs I am not willing to go the length of prescribing a man of his experience and ability." On these conditions I was elected.

SIR JOHN'S UNPOPULARITY—THE PEOPLE HAVE LOST ALL CONFIDENCE IN THEIR CHIEFTAIN.

Now you may perhaps have heard Sir John declare that it was owing to his influence that I ever held a seat in Parliament. Some of you who have watched political affairs closely may recollect his raid into Lennox in 1873—may recollect that when he and I stood before the people there he charged me with gross treachery and ingratitude, that I betrayed

Those who remember the session of 1866 will not require to be told the reason of that intimation. (Hear, hear.) By-and-bye Sir John thought fit to take Sir Francis Hincks into the Government. Before, he knew I did not trust him implicitly; he knew I was a man likely to take my own course, one who would support him so long as I thought it right and proper to do so, but no longer. Things went on this way with one little tiff between him and me, caused by my audacity in intimating that if he did not attend more closely to public business, I should explain to the House the cause of his negligence. When he took that step, I notified him that I did not approve of it, and as he had admitted, after he took that gentleman in, I notified him that I purposed to withdraw my support for a reason right well known to Sir John Macdonald. Though I had not justified him, I had always excused him for his delinquencies during the earlier part of his career from 1856 to 1862, on the ground that he was struggling under a mass of difficulties—legacies left him by Sir Francis Hincks—and it was mainly on that ground that I had abstained in 1853, before my election, from joining in the almost universal condemnation he met with in Lanark. Sir John was perfectly well aware of that—he knew my position; he knew that without writing myself down as a very inconsistent man I could not go to my constituents and say that I had supported a Government of which Sir Francis Hincks was a member. He knew that I had told him twenty times, "The only possible defence or excuse I can make for you during your earlier career is that in that time you were hardly a free agent, that you were obliged to deal with difficulties not fairly your own, difficulties placed in your way by Sir Francis Hincks." I may have done Sir Francis Hincks wrong, and if so I apologise for that wrong. For a long time Sir John sat dumb. From 1869, when I told him I would not support him after he took Sir Francis Hincks into the Government, to 1873, not a word did he say against my course; nor when, on the floor of Parliament, within three months after Sir Francis' appointment, I gave my reasons for opposing that gentleman's entrance into the Cabinet, first, because I thought Sir Francis Hincks' past conduct did not entitle him again to become a Canadian Minister, and, secondly, because while I fully recognized the right of the Reformers of Canada to be represented in Sir John Macdonald's Cabinet, I did not recognize Sir Francis Hincks as being a representative man among the then Reformers of Canada. Now, on that point Sir John Macdonald has taken issue with me. Although he sat dumb and mute while I made my statement in the House of Commons; although for four years he had not a word to say; yet, when I took office, all the evils of his wrath broke loose. In order that you may understand clearly and distinctly how Sir John regarded my allying myself with my honourable friend the present Premier, I will read you two or three words from a speech he delivered at a banquet in Ottawa shortly after I took office:—

"He is a Tory of the old Family Compact, and a fossil—not like myself, a young Liberal Conservative." (Laughter. And again: "I have seen many instances of base conduct, base ingratitude, and base treachery, but never in my life have I seen any man who has behaved so badly, so basely, and from such sordid motives as Mr. Cartwright!" (Laughter.)

Gentlemen, I think if I am such a demon of iniquity, that my hon. friend is much to be pitied for having taken such a wretch into his Cabinet—(hear, hear, and laughter)—and only consider, gentlemen, what a strain Sir John Macdonald, knowing me thoroughly, as he says he did, from the earliest moment of my political existence, must have put on his feelings to remain dumb from 1869 until November, 1873, and even so far to do violence to his sentiments as to address me,—not once, but a score of times—on the floor of the House during that interval as his "esteemed and intelligent friend" whom it wrung his very heart to part from.—(Hear, hear, and laughter.)

THE PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE QUESTION.—JOHN A. IN A TIGHT PLACE.

Now you will observe how in a tight place

the best way to keep in power, which I think my honourable friend the Premier might take a lesson from. Then there is a general valedictory to myself, and a summary of the qualifications of Sir Francis Hincks. In truth, it is really a long argument to show that Sir Francis Hincks was a real Reform leader, and an unanswerable proof, in six pages, that Sir John, when he denied that I stated the exact fact when I said that I objected to Sir Francis Hincks because he was not a Reform leader, was making a statement precisely as valuable as when he told Lord Dufferin on his honour and his fealty as a sworn Minister of the Crown that he was absolutely innocent of all the things laid to his charge by my honourable friend the Postmaster-General. (Hear, hear.) Now, I will tell you the reason why I did not use that letter before. I wanted Sir John Macdonald to make that charge in the House of Commons, where there were men around us who knew every incident and fact connected with the matter, I had intended myself to have made use of these men to have refuted him as I have to-day. But I waited in vain all last session; and though he was challenged again and again to make good the statements he had made on public platforms, he sat dumb. As he has again repeated that slander, though I have so far spared him the publication of the details of that letter, I say again, let him, if he dare, deny the authenticity of this letter or the correctness of the statement I have made, and you will have an opportunity of judging of just how truthful a man our ex-Premier is.

FORTHCOMING FACTS.

If I did support Sir John Macdonald in 1863, I supported him when his cause was desperate, when every man with a gleam of political sagacity knew that he had not a chance of bringing back a dozen members from Ontario at the general election in 1864. When I left him, remember it was in the zenith of his power, when if he had exercised common prudence he would not in all human likelihood have been dislodged from the position he occupied in 1869 and 1870 for many years. It was at that time that I chose, publicly and openly, to withdraw my support and allegiance from him. Now, of all these things I purpose speaking, and perhaps in some detail in my own county, among those who know both of us best, and who will decide again, as they have done before, what amount of credence is to be put in me and what amount in Sir John Macdonald. I promise that when in my own county I have occasion to deal with this matter, I will give Sir John Macdonald what he little cares to hear, and what he never manages by any chance to utter—the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. (Loud cheers.)

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF ELECTORS.

QUEBEC, Oct. 21.—The new joint pastoral letter of the Archbishop and Bishops of the Ecclesiastical Province of Quebec on elections, was read in the Roman Catholic Churches of this city to-day. The pastoral is not very lengthy, and occupies but about half an ordinary newspaper column. It commences by stating that the important events that have occurred and the many various difficulties that have arisen since the date of the last general election, oblige the Bishops to recall the principles and rules of conduct hitherto laid down in their councils, circulars, and pastoral letters, especially that of the 22nd of September, 1875. Then are quoted the obligations of electors as laid down in the 9th decree of the Fourth Synod of Quebec, calling upon pastors to instruct them, making them understand that the same law which confers upon citizens the right of voting, strictly obliges them to give their vote when required. The main part of the body of the letter is as follows:

In 1872 we considered it necessary to put you on your guard against the dangers of the Catholic Liberal doctrines. To that end our Fifth Synod made known to you in the very few words of the

A Scandalous Exhibition

The effect of too much Familiar on Sir John A. Macdonald at St. called forth the following true marks from the Home Journal:

"When a representative man forward either to propound a policy justify his public actions, or volunteers his services or presents on the invitation of his party, expected that he will at least not of overstepping the line of propriety of manners; that he will exhibit a briefy of act, chasteness of speech, common respect for public sentiment and feeling. It is at least demanded that his appearance shall marked by the significant effect of intoxication, the loss of self-control, gross breaches upon the propriety of occasion. But when the chief of and intelligent party, upon an when he could have rendered service the moral improvement and elevation of his country, utters words his friends dare not describe and can certify, it is a cause of saddest lament.

We dare say Sir John would given a similar exhibition at the 2 Tory Demonstration had it not been he (Sir John) did not wish to be Roe by-law.

Cartwright's Respects to Sir

UNREALIZED HOPES.

Mr. Cartwright in addressing the audience said:

now I have a question to ask of you—and remember I shall not complain in the least if you think you have had quite enough of me and desire to hear my honourable friend the Premier. I want to know before I sit down if you would like to hear a little morsel of secret political history? (Cries of "Yes," and "Hear, hear.") On these conditions I was elected.

SIR JOHN'S UNPOPULARITY—THE PEOPLE HAVE LOST ALL CONFIDENCE IN THEIR CHIEFTAIN.

Now you may perhaps have heard Sir John declare that it was owing to his influence that I ever held a seat in Parliament. Some of you who have watched political affairs closely may recollect his raid into Lennox in 1873—may recollect that when he and I stood before the people there he charged me with gross treachery and ingratitude, that I retorted in a fashion which I shall call attention to hereafter, and that the people of Lennox on that occasion elected me by a majority of 833. But you do not know, perhaps, that when I first became a member of Parliament Sir John Macdonald was not only unable to influence Lennox, but he was simply the most unpopular man that could have come into that county—a man detested by men of both sides for certain local reasons I shall not here trouble you with. Why, sir, in 1864, a short time after I was elected, in my own presence, he was routed off the hustings in Oshesha during the election of Senator Campbell for that division. The truth was that Sir John had become so unpopular that it was almost as much as Mr. Campbell's election was worth to have Sir John Macdonald seen that day at his side. Never in my experience did I know the electors of the county of Lennox refuse any gentleman a hearing so decidedly as they did in the case of Sir John Macdonald on that occasion, and you can judge from this incident how just was the nation he met with Lennox. Sir John was perfectly well aware of that—he knew my position; he knew that without writing myself down as a very inconsistent man I could not go to my constituents and say that I had supported a Government of which Sir Francis Hincks was a member. He knew that I had told him twenty times, "The only possible defence or excuse I can make for you during your earlier career is that in that time you were hardly a free agent, that you were obliged to deal with difficulties not fairly your own, difficulties placed in your way by Sir Francis Hincks." THE PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE QUESTION.—JOHN A. IN A TIGHT PLACE.

Now, you will please bear in mind that there are two points at issue here. Sir John does not deny that one of my grounds for opposing Sir Francis Hincks's appointment with his former misconduct, and I believe it to have been; but he has not the audacity to declare that he had a letter of mine which would show that I refused to support Sir Francis Hincks because he was a Reformer. Now, in the House of Commons I had stated that I refused to support Sir Francis because I believed he was unable to command the Reform support. This was the ground I gave in Sir John Macdonald's own hearing, and he did not dare to contradict the statement then. When I challenged him to produce the letter he had spoken of, he read to the electors here a letter in which there was not one word about my objecting on the ground that Sir Francis Hincks was a Reformer representative, and he went on to ask, what possible ground could he have for supposing that I objected unless it was because Sir Francis Hincks was a Reformer? Here are his words:—

I have again repeated that slander, though I have so far spared him the publication of the details of that letter, I say again, let him, if he dare, deny the authenticity of this letter or the correctness of the statement I have made, and you will have an opportunity of judging of just how truthful a man our ex-Premier is.

Pastoral of the Roman Catholic Bishops of Quebec.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF ELECTORS.

QUEBEC, Oct. 21.—The new joint pastoral letter of the Archbishop and Bishops of the Ecclesiastical Province of Quebec on elections, was read in the Roman Catholic Churches of this city to-day. The pastoral is not very lengthy, and occupies but about half an ordinary newspaper column. It commences by stating that the important events that have occurred and the many various difficulties that have arisen since the date of the last general election, oblige the Bishops to recall the principles and rules of conduct hitherto laid down in their councils, circulars, and pastoral letters, especially that of the 22nd of September, 1875. Then are quoted the obligations of electors as laid down in the 9th decree of the Fourth Synod of Quebec, calling upon pastors to instruct them, making them understand that the same law which confers upon citizens the right of voting, strictly obliges them to give their vote when required. The main part of the body of the letter is as follows:—

In 1872 we considered it necessary to put you on your guard against the dangers of the Catholic Liberal doctrine. To that end, the Fourth Synod made known to you in the very few words of the Sovereign Pontiff the character and fatal consequences of that chief error of modern times. Finally, our pastoral letter of the 22nd of September, 1875, dwelt at greater length upon the same subject, and warned you once again of the danger that beset you. This pastoral, submitted by one of our body to the Sovereign Pontiff himself, won for us words of praise, and encouragement from the immortal Pius IX. Unfortunately, however, and contrary to our intention, some have understood this document, not as a mere statement of principles, but as invading the domain of persons and political parties. Our intention was to set before you the true doctrine of the constituting and the rights of the Church; the rights and duties of the clergy in society; the obligations of the Catholic press, and the sanctity that surrounds an oath. This was our purpose then, and this only is our purpose now. Herein we do not follow the example of the Holy See, which while it condemns the errors of Catholic Liberalism, abstains from pointing out persons or political parties. There does not exist any pontifical document containing the condemnation of any political party whatsoever. All the condemnations that have hitherto been issued by that venerable authority are directed solely against Catholic Liberals and their principles; and it is in this sense that the brief address by the Holy Father to one of our body in September, 1876, is to be understood by all. Wherefore, following the example of the Sovereign Pontiff and the wise rule of our Fourth Synod, we leave it to each man to decide for himself in conscience and in the sight of God who the individuals are who are liable to these condemnations, no matter what the political party may be to which they belong.

The effect of too much Famil on Sir John A. Macdonald at St. called forth the following true marks from the Home Journal:

HOW TO ACCOUNT FOR IT.

POLITICAL CLIPS.

SIR JOHN INSULTS HIS JEWISH CONSTITUENTS.

Sir John Macdonald is never tired of insulting a very large and respectable class of the community—the Jews. Whenever he wishes to make a more than usually opprobrious comparison he refers to them, and in a way we believe they will resent when they have the opportunity. Only the other day at Chatham, when speaking of the Neebing Hotel, purchased by the Government—a transaction he wished to characterize as a piece of the most flagrant trickery and rascality—he used the following language, which we clip from the report of his speech as given in the London Free Press, a journal that supports him: “The Neebing Hotel fraud in connection with the Kamisistiquia land job was also referred to, and the speaker (Sir John) mentioned by the way that the cuts in the newspapers were correct pictures of the structure. He said ‘It was like the Jew’s razor; it was not made to shave, but to sell.’” On the floor of Parliament as well as on the stump, Sir John indulges in such sneers, which are needlessly insulting and uncalled for. Such manners are indeed pretty in the man who assumes to be the very pink of the Party of Gentlemen.—Hamilton Times.

CHOICE LANGUAGE.

In his recent speech at St. Thomas, Sir John Macdonald alluded as follows to Hon. Mr. Mills: “There was a great deal more in the speech, but he had not time to dissect the little animal. He would tell them a story however. At the time of the Anglin scandal it was found that there were some thirty of the Ministerial supporters in a similar scrape, and he himself was charged with having acted unconstitutionally. Mr. Mills came to him in the lobby of the House one day and said that he gave fair notice if any move were made against them that it would be retaliated. His answer to Mr. Mills was to do his best or his worst, or to be plainer, if ladies and clergymen were not present he might say that his reply was to ‘Go to h—.’” A statesman in England who could descend to such disgusting ribald profanity as the above, would be driven from public life by the universal scorn and the sense of self-respect of the whole people, irrespective of party; but in Canada we are asked to place such a man at the head of the Government of the country.—Ottawa Free Press.

Stouffville, recently incorporated, has been holding a political meeting on its own account. Among the speakers was Mr. Dymond, who apostrophized Mr. Macdonald as follows:

“Man of the wandering foot and weary breast,
When wilt thou flee away and be at rest?”

What Ailed the Great Chieftain?

It is a question which every Conservative present at last Friday’s demonstration should honestly ask himself. What ailed the great chieftain? It is also a question which he should honestly try to answer. So much has been said and sang in praise of Sir John A. Macdonald by the party of which he is the head, his qualities as a public man and a distinguished statesman have been so loudly extolled, that opponents as well as friends were willing to concede him a high place on the roll of Canada’s honorable men. And the laudations of the gentlemen who had preceded him on the platform only heightened the already high expectations of the large and respectable mass of people who had gathered in from all sections of the surrounding country to see and hear for themselves the great Conservative chieftain. With one single exception, the burden of all the speeches was praise to Sir John A. Macdonald. Hon. William Macdougall alone abstained from playing the game of sycophant, —

That Abandoned Man:

Of all the political renegades known to the people of Canada, William Macdougall is the most contemptible. This is shown by the fact that although he was discarded by Sir John, whom he afterwards styled a traitor not only to the Sovereign of the Dominion, but to the people of the North West; and guilty of treason to union, progress, freedom and civilization in every province of the Dominion, he is now found the most servile of Sir John’s dunkees at all his picnics. No one possessed of the smallest particle of self respect could be guilty of acts he is charged with. He has acted the part of an “abandoned coward” and wounded the feelings of the living by assailing the revered dead. The conduct of this man is very fully shown by the London Advertiser, who says that “William Macdougall, has been again guilty at East Durham, of the flagrant indecency of trying to wound the living by assailing the dead. Fortunately, there is no fear of the memory of any of Canada’s illustrious sons, whether living or dead, sufferings from any attacks ‘the abandoned man’ can make. Mr. Macdougall is perhaps the most unpopular man in Canada. Despised by Reformers—he is held in equal contempt by Conservatives, who rightly regard him as a Swiss mercenary willing to carry his sword wherever he can make most by it. He is said to exact and receive his fee for speaking, in hard cash, before each picnic. The meanest of the work is always portioned out to him, and is done apparently con amore. The ‘abandoned man’ should be hissed off every platform he presumes to degrade by his presence.”—Berlin Telegraph.

The Hard Times Disappearing.

“His best friend deserting him,” is the latest cartoon in Grip. It represents a dilapidated figure with “The Hard Times,” inscribed upon his back, trudging off with his stick and bundle, while in the foreground stands Sir John Macdonald lugubriously crying, “Stay, O stay! till after the general elections.” From his coat-tail pocket protrudes a parcel of documents endorsed “Opposition triumph—The Government responsible for the hard times.” Rising over a hill appears the sun with “Coming Prosperity” written on his happy face. The cartoon is well conceived and places the political quack in the proper light before the country. In another column there appears the following squib:

JOHN A.’S TROUBLE.

Oh, Hard Times, do not go away!
Stay by me till election day;
Thou art my tactics and my friend,
My hopes for power on thee depend!

Sir John knows perfectly well that returning prosperity will make the people so busy that they will have neither the time nor the wish to meddle with politics, and that the only hope his party has for a speedy return to power is to influence popular opinion—always excitable during times of depression—against the Government and trade upon its irrational passions and unfounded prejudices. Truly, this is noble work for an enlightened Statesman! We venture to say there is not another man in the Empire who claims the title of “Right Honorable,” who would stoop to such employment.—Hamilton Times.

WAR NEWS.

GREAT RUSSIAN VICTORY.

RETREAT OF ISMAIL PASHA INTO RUSSIAN TERRITORY—50,000 RUSSIANS KILLED AND WOUNDED ALREADY—FIGHTING BE-

General Teirst, formerly in the American army and now correspondent of the New York Times, has been expelled from Roumania by the Russian authorities because he served in the Turkish army during the Crimean war.

The Russians have contracted a series of railways in Bulgaria. The main line will run from Sofia to Smyrna, with branches to Plevna and Tirnova. The passage of the Danube will be by ferry boats.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION:

General Heymann is advancing on Erzeroum. Kars is surrounded and negotiations for its surrender have been opened. The Russian headquarters are now at Yezinkoi. General Lazaroff is marching against Imaïl Pasha.

The Czarewitsch is pushing forward against Ragrad, leaving a corps to operate against Rustchuk.

Russia has ordered the mobilization of all Cossacks not in active service, amounting to ninety-one regiments.

TURKEY’S CONDITIONS OF PEACE.

The Turkish journals Fakih and Turquit insist upon the fact that England and Austria have sounded the Czar and the Sultan in regard to the prospect of mediation leading to a satisfactory peace. The Czar, it is said, lent a favourable ear to the proposals. The Sultan, however, declared that the war must be continued at all hazards unless two points have been previously secured beyond all doubt—the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. Under no other conditions, his Majesty added, could Turkey assent to an armistice. An arrangement upon any other basis would assuredly fail. The Turquit add that the Sultan is firmly resolved faithfully to uphold the constitution, under which all desirable reforms can be carried out.

THE TURKISH POSITION.

The Porte accuses the Russians of violating the accepted neutrality of the signs of the red cross and the red crescent, and firing upon ambulances removing wounded Turks from the battle field.

On receiving information of Mukhtar’s defeat Ismaïl Pasha withdrew from the neighborhood of Igdyr to the heights of Zov, near the frontier. It is believed he is on the point of completely evacuating Russian territory.

On Saturday forty Turkish soldiers, chiefly Anatolians, deserted Osman Pasha’s camp, at Plevna, and came to Simnitsa under escort. They declare they deserted because there is so little food in Plevna that the men only got a pound of bread in twenty-four hours. There were 180,000 men in Plevna who could only be made to surrender by hunger.

The Turks are actively constructing a new interior line of formidable defences at Plevna. Sickens is comparatively rare. Provisions have never failed, but it is impossible to provide fodder for the oxen and horses.

Six thousand provision carts are on the road to Plevna. Osman Pasha has ordered all Circassian irregulars, Bulgarians, and non-combatant Mohammedans to quit Plevna.

The Porte charges that the Cossacks and Bulgarians sacked and buried the town of Isor, and subjected the inhabitants to cruel treatment.

Mukhtar Pasha is safe. He occupies a strong position at the Yenikoi, west of Soghianlu Dagh. Ismaïl Pasha’s retreat and junction with Mukhtar is seriously menaced.

ROUMANIANS REPULSED AT PLEVNA.

At the first attack the Roumanians were repulsed before they gained the redoubt. At the second attack the three foremost battalions leaped into the trenches and vainly endeavoured to carry resumes the reasons why he could not at that time put salt on their tails. (Loud laughter.) The third paragraph goes on to show in detail what "stepped to the lips in corruption" means, used from one public man to another, and that it is rather a complimentary phrase than otherwise. Then he goes on to dilate on the advantages to the old Reformers of Canada of Sir Francis Hincks going into the Government, to deliver them from the tyranny of George Brown and THE GLOBE, and on the immense rally there would be around him—as in the general election of 1872, for instance. (Laughter.) Then follows a lecture on the best way to keep in power, which I think my honourable friend the Premier might take a lesson from. Then there is a general valedictory to myself, and a summary of the qualifications of Sir Francis Hincks. In truth, it is really a long argument to show that Sir Francis Hincks was a real Reform leader, and an unanswerable proof, in six pages, that Sir John, when he denied that I stated the exact fact when I said that I objected to Sir Francis Hincks because he was not a Reform leader, was making a statement precisely as valuable as when he told Lord Dufferin on his honour and his fealty as a sworn Minister of the Crown that he was absolutely innocent of all the things laid to his charge by my honourable friend the Postmaster-General. (Hear, hear.) Now, I will tell you the reason why I did not use that letter before. I waited Sir John Macdonald to make that charge in the House of Commons, where there were men around us who know every incident and fact connected with the matter, I had intended myself to have made use of these men to have refuted him as I have to-day. But I waited in vain all last session; and though he was challenged again and again to make good the statements he had made on public platforms, he sat dumb. As he has again repeated that slander, though I have so far spared him the publication of the details of that letter, I say again, let him, if he dare, deny the authenticity of this letter or the correctness of the statement I have made, and you will have an opportunity of judging of just how truthful a man our ex-Premier is.

FORTHCOMING FACTS.

If I did support Sir John Macdonald in 1863, I supported him when his cause was desperate, when every man with a gleam of political sagacity knew that he had not a chance of bringing back a dozen members from Ontario at the general election in 1864. When I left him, remember it was in the zenith of his power, when if he had exercised common prudence he would not in all human likelihood have been dislodged from the position he occupied in 1869 and 1870 for many years. It was at that time that I chose, publicly and openly, to withdraw my support and allegiance from him. Now, of all these things I purpose speaking, and perhaps in some detail in my own county, among those who know both of us best, and who will decide again, as they have done before, what amount of credence is to be put in me and what amount in Sir John Macdonald. I promise that when in my own county I have occasion to deal with this matter, I will give Sir John Macdonald what he little cares to hear, and what he never manages by any chance to utter—the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. (Loud cheers.)

Were one to believe even half that was said of the chieftain by Messrs. Wood, Plumb, Hawkins, Carling, and the chairman, one could hardly accord him lower rank than archangel. GREAT RUSSIAN VICTORY.

RETREAT OF ISMAIL PASHA INTO RUSSIAN TERRITORY—60,000 RUSSIANS KILLED AND WOUNDED ALREADY—FIGHTING BEFORE PLEVNA RECOMMENCED—HUNGER IN OSMAN PASHA'S RANKS—KARS SURROUNDED AND NEGOTIATIONS FOR ITS SURRENDER OPENED—SULAIMAN PASHA IN RETREAT UPON RASGRAD—A NEW INTERIOR LINE OF DEFENCES BUILT IN PLEVNA—FURTHER PROVISIONS ON THE ROAD—ALL NON-COMBATANTS ORDERED TO QUIT—THE CAZAREVITCH PUSHING FORWARD—21,000 MONTENEGRIANS FAMINE STRICKEN—CONTINUATION OF WAR FROM THE UNITED STATES FOR TURKEY—ALL THE COSACKS TO BE MOBILIZED.

IMPORTANT RUSSIAN VICTORY.

On Sunday the 14th inst., the Russians had completed preparation for an important forward movement, and on Monday morning commenced a heavy cannonade on the key of the Turkish position. In the afternoon Gen. Heyman, with 19,000 men, carried this position by assault, and this successful advance of his cut the Turkish army in two. Mukhtar Pasha's centre and left found refuge under cover of the fortifications of Kars, but only after terrible losses. The Turkish right was surrounded and forced to surrender, with thirty-two guns and a large quantity of material. Seven Pashas are among the prisoners. It is estimated that the Russians captured in Monday's battle thirty-two battalions of Turks, four brigades of artillery, one hundred officers, and two thousand horses. A son of the Circassian Chief Schamyl and Mensa Pasha were killed. The Turkish loss is estimated at 16,000, besides stores. The Russian force at Ardahan, which has been kept in check by Mukhtar rather than by any effective opposing force, will not remain idle any longer. Thus with one blow all the advantages gained by the Turks during the summer have disappeared. Unless the weather and the extreme difficulty of supplying the Russian army interfere, a march upon Erzeroum may be tried again this year. Mukhtar says his loss is only 8,000, and claims that a regiment and a half of his own cavalry and four battalions of infantry were destroyed. He attributes the defeat to the Russian reinforcements and their two hundred guns.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION.

A correspondent reports the Russian route of communication from Gurgievo to Simnitsa almost impassable. The sides of the road are lined with skeletons of horses and cattle. The mud in Simnitsa renders walking impossible. Half of the inhabitants and a large portion of the military have the Danube fever, typhus or dysentery. The bridge across the Danube is very shaky. The Gurgievo and Simnitsa positions are each defended

They remained an hour in the trenches, which gave rise to the premature report of its capture. The Roumanians then withdrew with a loss of two officers and two hundred men killed, twenty officers and 767 men wounded.

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY.

The steamer J. B. Walker, with $2,000,000 worth of munitions of war for Turkey, sailed from New Haven Ct., on Tuesday.

A Russian prince in Chicago has been entering into contracts there for food for the Russian army. Arms have also been ordered in America.

MONTENEGRO.—The inhabitants of Wassoivich, District of Montenegro, numbering 21,000, are famine stricken.

THE LATE SIEGE AND DEFENCE OF PLEVNA.—NOTHING SIMILAR IN MODERN HISTORY.

Military men, says the Telegraph, will not fail to be struck by the large development of held works in the present struggle as applied to positions. There is nothing similar in modern history, except the examples furnished by the American civil war; for Wellington's lines in Portugal, and Soult's on the French frontier, were not of the same character. In order to find another parallel we must go back to the days of Villars and Marlborough. It was the occupation, entrenchment, and superb defence of Plevna which frustrated the mighty Russian invasion, and has now placed the name of Osman Pasha on the roll of distinguished captains. His perception of the value of the position, the energy and rapidity with which he converted an open town into a formidable fortress, the coolness and courage with which he has resisted a long bombardment and a desperate assault, and his just appreciation of the exact moment at which to abandon the defensive and deliver an attack, establish him as a commander of no ordinary capacity.

The military correspondent of Le Temps says that at the last battle before Plevna the Russian soldiers were loud in their praises of the wonderful bravery of the Turks. The colonel of an artillery regiment told him that his guns were cutting down the Turks in hundreds, but they bravely held on and showed no signs of giving way under the fire directed against them. A Russian soldier turned round to the officer and said:—"When our Czar is in Plevna he certainly ought to give some crosses of the order of St. George to those brave men."

Pastor of the Roman Catholic Bishops of Quebec.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF ELECTORS.

QUEBEC, Oct. 21.—The new joint pastoral letter of the Archbishop and Bishops of the Ecclesiastical Province of Quebec in elections, was read in the Roman Catholic Churches of this city to-day. The pastoral is not very lengthy, and occupies out about half an ordinary newspaper column. It commences by stating that the important events that have occurred and the many various difficulties that have arisen since the date of the last general election, oblige the Bishops to recall the principles and rules of conduct hitherto laid down in their councils, circulars, and pastoral letters, especially that of the 22nd of September, 1875. Then are quoted the obligations of electors as laid down in the 9th decree of the Fourth Synod of Quebec, calling upon pastors to instruct them, making them understand that the same law which governs upon citizens the right of voting, strictly obliges them to give their vote when required. The main part of the body of the letter is as follows:

In 1872 we considered it necessary to put you under guard against the dangers of the Catholic liberal doctrines. To that end our Fifth Synod made known to you in the very few words of the sovereign Pontiff the character and fatal consequences of that chief error of modern times. Finally, our pastoral letter of the 22nd of September, 1875, dwelt at greater length upon the same subject, and warned you once again of the danger that beset you. This pastoral, submitted by one of our body to the Sovereign Pontiff, and himself, won for us words of praise and encouragement from the immortal Pius IX. Unfortunately, however, and contrary to our intention, some have understood this document, not as a mere statement of principles, but as invading the domain of persons and political parties. Our intention was to set before you the true doctrine concerning the constitution and the rights of the church; she rights and duties of the clergy in society; the obligations of the Catholic press, and the sanctity that surrounds an oath. This only was our purpose then, and this only is our purpose now. Herein we do not follow the example of the Holy See, which, while it condemns the errors of Catholic Liberalism, abstains from pointing out persons or political parties. There does not exist any pontifical document containing the condemnation of any political party whatsoever. All the condemnations that have hitherto been issued by that venerable authority are directed solely against Catholic Liberals and their principles; and it is in this sense that the brief address by the Holy Father to one of our body in September, 1876, is to be understood by all. Wherefore, following the example of the sovereign Pontiff and the wise rule of our Fourth Synod, we leave it to each man to decide for himself his conscience and in the sight of God who individuals are who are liable to these condemnations, no matter what the political party may be to which they belong.

A Scandalous Exhibition.

The effect of too much Family Proof on Sir John A. Macdonald at St. Thomas called forth the following truthful remarks from the Home Journal:

"When a representative man comes forward either to propound a policy or to justify his public actions, whether he volunteers his services or presents himself on the invitation of his party, it is expected that he will at least not be guilty of overstepping the line of propriety and good manners; that he will exhibit sobriety of act, chasteness of speech, and common respect for public sentiment and feeling. It is at least demanded of him that his appearance shall not be marked by the significant effect of intoxication, the loss of self-control, and gross breaches upon the proprieties of the occasion. But when the chief of a great and intelligent party, upon an occasion when he could have rendered service to the moral improvement and elevation of his country, utters words his friends dare not repeat, and act in a manner his friends dare not describe and cannot justify, it is a cause of saddest lamentation."

We dare say Sir John would have given a similar exhibition at the Napanee Tory Demonstration had it not been that he (Sir John) did not wish to break the Roe by-law.

Cartwright's Respects to Sir John.

UNREALIZED HOPES.

Mr. Cartwright in addressing his Synco audience said:

And, gentlemen, what is a much pleaster thing, in all the great assemblages we have addressed, so far as I can recollect, we have not seen one drunken or disorderly character among those vast crowds. (Loud cheer.) I only hope that Sir John Macdonald can say the same thing for the crowds who have assembled to hear him; and I most sincerely hope that the crowds who have assembled to meet him have been able to say as much for Sir John Macdonald. (Hear, hear and laughter.)

HOW TO ACCOUNT FOR IT.

If you ask me how I account for a man of his ability and experience bringing forward charges at once so useless, so easily refuted, and so damaging to himself, I can only say that I have always suspected, and this would seem to confirm my suspicions, that Sir John Macdonald knew really very little of the details of his own Administration, either because he was wholly engrossed in attending to mere party tactics, or possibly that he was at times oblivious of all that passed around him.—Tiscr, Oct. 19th.

IMPORTANT RUSSIAN VICTORY.

On Sunday the 14th inst., the Russians had completed preparation for an important forward movement, and on Monday morning commenced a heavy cannonade on the key of the Turkish position. In the afternoon Gen. Ilyushin, with 10,000 men, carried this position by assault, and this successful advance of his cut the Turkish army in two. Moukhtar Pasha's centre and left found refuge under cover of the fortifications of Kars, but only after terrible losses. The Turkish right was surrounded and forced to surrender, with thirty-two guns and a large quantity of material. Seven Pashas are among the prisoners. It is estimated that the Russians captured in Monday's battle thirty-two battalions of Turks, four brigades of artillery, one hundred officers, and two thousand horses. A son of the Circassian Chief Schamyl and Moussa Pasha were killed. The Turkish loss is estimated at 16,000, besides stores. The Russian force at Ardahan, which has been kept in check by Mukhtar rather than by any effective opposing force, will not remain idle any longer. Thus with one blow all the advantages gained by the Turks during the summer have disappeared. Unless the weather and the extreme difficulty of supplying the Russian army interfere, a march upon Erzeroum may be tried again this year. Moukhtar says his loss is only 800, and claims that a regiment and a half of his own cavalry and four battalions of infantry were destroyed. He attributes the defeat to the Russian reinforcements and their two hundred guns.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION.

A correspondent reports the Russian route of communication from Guirgevo to Simnizta almost impassable. The sides of the road are lined with skeletons of horses and cattle. The mud in Simnizta renders walking impossible. Half of the inhabitants and a large portion of the military have the Danube fever, typhus or dysentery. The bridge across the Danube is very shaky. The Guirgevo and Simnizta railway is progressing very slowly. Work on the barracks and hospitals also moves slowly.

Within the last six weeks the Russians in Asia have raised 40,000 fresh troops. The Russians before Plevna received reinforcements of 10,000.

SIMNITZA, Oct. 20.—Rain is now falling heavily with every appearance of continuing. The roads are almost impassable. Never anything like it at Balaklava.

The Russians have 70,000 before Kars. Moukhtar Pasha's army at the time of the battle contained only 40,000, including fourteen battalions from Kars. The Ottoman field army lost a third of its strength. After the garrison of Kars is completed, but few battalions will be left to form the nucleus of a relief force at Erzeroum. The Grand Duke Michael can safely leave 40,000 before Kars, and with the remainder push toward Erzeroum.

A Russian contractor informs the Grand Duke that material for iron huts ordered in England have been confiscated as contraband of war by the British Government.

A Russian semi-official journal reports 52,534 Russians killed and wounded to Oct. 11th.

PORDEEN, Oct. 19.—The Czar told the general staff on Wednesday that he and all the members of the Imperial family would remain with the army. He concluded:—"I myself, will care for the wants of the army, and, if necessary, all Russia will, as once before, take up arms."

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 20.—An Imperial ukase was promulgated to-day, ordering the foot and horse artillery of the reserve to be placed on a war footing.

The steamer J. B. Walker, with $2,000,000 worth of munitions of war for Turkey, sailed from New Haven Ct., on Tuesday.

A Russian prince in Chicago has been entering into contracts there for food for the Russian army. Arms have also been ordered in America.

MONTENEGRO.—The inhabitants of Wassioich, District of Montenegro, numbering 21,000, are famine stricken.

THE LATE SIEGE AND DEFENCE OF PLEVNA.—SOMETHING SIMILAR IN MODERN HISTORY.

Military men, says the Telegraph, will not fail to be struck by the large development of field works in the present struggle as applied to positions. There is nothing similar in modern history, except the examples furnished by the American civil war; for Wellington's lines in Portugal, and Soult's on the French frontier, were not of the same character. In order to find another parallel we must go back to the days of Villars and Marlborough. It was the occupation, entrenchment, and superb defence of Plevna which frustrated the mighty Russian invasion, and has now placed the name of Osman Pasha on the roll of distinguished captains. His perception of the value of the position, the energy and rapidity with which he converted an open town into a formidable fortress, the coolness and courage with which he has resisted a long bombardment and a desperate assault, and his just appreciation of the exact moment at which to abandon the defensive and deliver an attack, establish him as a commander of no ordinary capacity.

The military correspondent of Le Temps says that at the last battle before Plevna the Russian soldiers were loud in their praises of the wonderful bravery of the Turks. The colonel of an artillery regiment told him that his guns were cutting down the Turks in hundreds, but they bravely held on and showed no signs of giving way under the fire directed against them. A Russian soldier turned round to the officer and said:—"When our Czar is in Plevna he certainly ought to give some crosses of the order of St. George to those brave men."

General Teirst, formerly in the Ameri- can army and now correspondent of the New York Times, has been expelled from Roumania by the Russian authorities because he served in the Turkish army during the Crimean war.

The Russians have contracted for a series of railways in Bulgaria. The main line will run from Sistova to Plovdiv Studen, with branches to Plovdiv and Tirnova. The passage of the Danube will be by ferry boats.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION:

General Heymann is advancing on Erzeroum. Kars is surrounded and negotiations for its surrender have been opened. The Russian headquarters are now at Tezinkoi. General Lazaroff is marching against Imaïl Pasha.

The Czarewitch is pushing forward against Rasgrad, leaving a corps to operate against Rustchuk.

Russia has ordered the mobilization of all Cossacks not in active service, amounting to ninety-one regiments.

TURKEY'S CONDITIONS OF PEACE.

The Turkish journals Vakit and Tur- quit insist upon the fact that England and Austria have sounded the Czar and the Sultan in regard to the prospect of mediation leading to a satisfactory peace. The Czar, it is said, lent a favourable ear to the proposals. The Sultan, however, declared that the war must be continued at all hazards unless two points have been previously secured beyond all doubt—the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. Under no other conditions, his Majesty added, could Turkey assent to an armistice. An arrangement upon any other basis would assuredly fail. The Turquit add that the Sultan is firmly resolved faithfully to uphold the constitution, under which all desirable reforms can be carried out.

THE TURKISH POSITION.

The Porte accuses the Russians of violating the accepted neutrality of the signs of the red cross and the red crescent, and firing upon ambulances removing wounded Turks from the battle field.

On receiving information of Mukhtar's defeat Ismaïl Pasha withdrew from the neighborhood of Igdyr to the heights of Zov, near the frontier. It is believed he is on the point of completely evacuating Russian territory.

On Saturday forty Turkish soldiers, chiefly Anatolians, deserted Osman Pasha's camp, at Plevna, and came to Simnitza under escort. They declare they deserted because there is so little food in Plevna that the men only got a pound of bread in twenty-four hours. There were 180,000 men in Plevna who could only be made to surrender by hunger.

The Turks are actively constructing a new interior line of formidable defences at Plevna. Sickness is comparatively rare. Provisions have never failed, but it is impossible to provide fodder for the oxen and horses.

Six thousand provision carts are on the road to Plevna. Osman Pasha has ordered all Circassian irregulars, Bulgarians, and non-combatant Mohammedans to quit Plevna.

The Porte charges that the Cossacks and Bulgarians sacked and buried the the Town of Isor, and subjected the inhabitants to cruel treatment.

Mukhtar Pasha is safe. He occupies a strong position at the Yenikoi, west of Sogianlu Dagh. Ismaïl Pasha's retreat and junction with Mukhtar is seriously menaced.

ROUMANIANS REPULSED AT PLEVNA.

A Russian official despatch detailing Friday's attack upon the second Grivitza redoubt before Plevna says:—

At the first attack the Roumanians were repulsed before they gained the redoubt. At the second attack the three foremost battalions leaped into the trenches and vainly endeavoured to carry the redoubt. They remained an hour in the trenches, which gave rise to the premature report of its capture. The

The American tug Sarah Daly of Ogdensburgh, N. Y., seized at this port for towing Canadian vessels, was released on Monday on Mr. Daily paying the penalty $100, expenses $35, and duty $43.75. It is said the tug has since been surveyed and registered as a Canadian vessel.

Caution to Cattle Shippers.

A farmer of Itherville, in ignorance of the regulation forbidding the importation of cattle from England during the prevalence of the dangerous cattle plague there, has shipped a load of fine cattle to Quebec, which have been detained there by the Customs authorities. The disease is of so dangerous a character that it may be imported by even healthy cattle, and the most strict precautions are absolutely necessary. Ample notice of the regulation prohibiting importation of cattle was given in Canada, and in England, by advertisement.

Pullman Cattle Cars.

A new venture, in the interest of both commerce and humanity, is the introduction of "palace cars" for cattle. Several of these, known as McPherson's palace stock cars, passed through here the other day. The cattle have the advantage of light, air and comfortable stalls, and they are abundantly watered and fed on the cars, instead of being removed to, or three times to be gorged at filthy stock yards on the way. The result is that, while each car carries a greater weight of cattle than the old box-cars, the shrinkage is found to be some 40 per cent less on arriving at the destination.

Belleville Justice.

THE ZWICKS' ISLAND OUTRAGE—THE PRISONER ACQUITTED.

At the Belleville Assizes on the 18th, Henry Cullen, Henry Geary, and Michael Nolan were charged with ravishing one Anna Maria Emsley, and Robt. Wesley was charged with abducting her. The case of Henry Cullen was first tried. The evidence of the girl Emsley was to the effect that on Friday evening, the 20th August last, she was returned to her home in town after looking for work in the country, when she was met in a lonely place by Robt. Wesley, who seized her and was forcing her to go along with him when a man named Wallace came along and he was obliged to let her go. He caught her again, however, and having gagged her, one Jones assisted in placing her in a boat. After roughly using her, Jones rowed her to Zwicks' island, she on the way trying to upset the boat, and he threatening to split her head with a paddle. The men kept her on the island during Saturday, beat loads of young men going there, and one after another violating her person. On Saturday night she was taken across to a barn by four of the gang, and back to the island on Sunday morning, when the scenes of the day before were repeated. Some twenty-eight or thirty men violated her before she was rescued on Sunday night by the police. Her clothes were torn from her back, leaving her almost naked. She had been subject to fits since, as a result of her injuries. Her evidence was contradicted in some essential particulars by the witnesses for the defence.

The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty." The case was one of the most brutal and revolting in its details of any ever tried in Canada.

Japanese Competition with England.

The Birmingham Post publishes an extract from a letter received by a large manufacturing house in Birmingham from its agent in Japan. The writer says:—The Japanese are now making a number of articles which I formerly purchased from you, and at prices beyond the possibility of European competition. In fact, quite a number of different classes of merchandise are being made in this country, and Europeans are obliged to discontinue importing in consequence. This may appear somewhat strange to you; nevertheless, it is a fact. Bear in mind, Asiatic life is no other race can, and upon food which would not sustain a European house-dog. Frugal as badgers, industrious as bees, they undersell every labor market which they enter, and outdo every civilized artisan at his own trade. Anyone who sees a Japanese carpenter at work, with his toes for a vice, and his thighs and stomach for a bench, has his tools well used, and goods equal to European turned out. They will, in fact, become formidable rivals of all kinds of Western manufactures. The Japanese are always ready to learn, and to outvie everything that the West does, and this they do with less food, less air, less clothing, and less comfort than any civilized workman.

Cheering Business Notes.

The following from the commercial columns of the Montreal Star gives a pleasing and truthful picture of our business, present and prospective:—(Gran continues to move steadily, and the English market is taking our supplies of wheat at good remunerative values as fast as the farmers can market them. Outgoing European steamers are taxed to their fullest capacity. The exportation of Canadian produce was never known to be more abundant generally than it is this season, and certainly there was never a better prospect of its being required at as good prices as at the present moment. Millers have been working night and day

Cross Husbands and Scolding Wives.

"Domestic infelicity," which newspaper reporters nowadays credit with being such an important part in life's drama is often the result of lingering or chronic disease. What husband or wife can be cheerful, smiling, and pleasant, when constantly suffering from the tortures some dread disease? Perhaps the husband's liver becomes torpid, and he experiences bitter, disagreeable taste, nausea, has chilly sensations, alternates with great heat and dryness of the face of his body, pain in his sides, shoulders, or back, eyes and skin are tinged with yellow, feels dull, indisposed, dizzy. Through his suffering he becomes gloomy, despondent, and exceedingly irritable in temper. Instead of resorting to so reliable a remedy as a few snuff doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pills and following up their action with use of Golden Medical Discovery, to purify the blood, if he plays the part of "penny wise and pound foolish" man, he will attempt to economize by saving small cost of these medicines. Continuing to suffer, his nervous system becomes impaired, and he is fretful and peevish, a fit subject to become embroiled in "domestic infelicity." Of the good wife from her too laborious duties or far cares, have become subject to such chronic affections as are peculiarly incident her sex, and being reduced in blood strength, suffering from backache, nervousness, headache, internal fever, enduring pains too numerous to mention she may become peevish and fretful—thing but a genial helpmate. In this deplorable condition of ill health, she acts wisely and employ Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, it will in due time by its cordial, tonic and nerve properties, restore her health and transform from the peevish, scolding, irritable temper invalid to a happy, cheerful wife. Laying aside levity and speaking seriously, husbands and wives, you will find Family Medicines above mentioned reliable and potent remedies. Four particulars of their properties and use see Pierce's Memorandum Book, which is given away by all druggists.

Deaths From Drink.

James McMaster, one of the oldest settlers of North Orillia, went down Washago to the store, became thoroughly drunk, fell out of his wagon going home and was picked up dead. Thomas Hutton, of Heathcote, Ont., once a temperate and good man took to the cup, which proved a fatal draught to him at last. It is said he drank thirty-two gallons of whiskey since June. Robert Hopkins Meaford, had been drinking excessively for some time past, and at last while delirium tremens took an overdose of morphine, from which he died quite suddenly. A man—name unknown—has been drinking heavily at St. Hilaire, Q., and in company with two companions started down the G. T. R. track, when was struck by the engine and instantly killed. A printer named Armstrong, run over by an engine in the G. W. R. yard in London, and so fearfully mangled that he only survived for two hours. He was intoxicated at the time of the accident. Dr. Balcom opened the chest by making a deep incision at the lower end of the shoulder blade, and Fearful Colliery Explosion.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THREE MEN IM PRISONED IN A MINE.

A terrible explosion occurred on Monday in a colliery at High Blantyre, near Glasgow, by which many lives are supposed to have been lost. At the time of the accident 233 men were in the mine, and it is feared that none of these were rescued except those in the immediate vicinity of the shaft at the time of the explosion. Exploring parties who have been down report forty corpses at the bottom of the shaft, and faint knocking was heard in an adjacent part of the mine. Owing to the poisonous gas the succoring party could not prosecute their search, and were compelled to return. They made a second expedition, however, and reached a point within 120 fathoms of the imprisoned men, but it was feared that they would be unable to reach them in time to rescue them alive. The Barley Trade.

We called attention the other day to foreign demand for barley in New York, Oswego, and the probability that Canada would soon have a direct trade with England in this cereal. On Friday and Saturday 4,000 bushels of Canadian barley sailed from New York in bond for shipment to English ports. Besides this amount, purchased on the same market are known to have taken 50,000 bushels of New York State barley, and 7,000 bushels of Western for port to Britain. We also learn that several cargoes were bought east of Toronto, to sent by way of Montreal to the English markets. The prospect of a great trade in the product springing up is of the most gratifying kind. The intrinsic merit of the grain raised in Ontario over that produced in States will place Canadian shippers in most advantageous position with brewer the older countries. If this trade develops we may be assured the barley of this country will be much sought after. Another feature of the trade deserves special attention at the present moment. Millers report large quantities are being ground throughout the country for feeding cattle. This promises well for the revival of prices, a general improvement to all concerned. We clear the market of the surplus stock thought to be available even if it fails to elicit a rise in prices, and a healthier level or state of business will thus be established. Millers for the past two years and especially since the commencement of the present season, have been inclined to wait until stocks are well forward. This policy appears to be to hold back in the changes until supplies accumulate at Albany and New York, when they expect to sell and they give away, the market will be and they can stock at low prices. The port trade will probably interfere with the Many families who keep coal fires over night are not so careful to close all the pipe dampers and leave the stove door open. The gas thus generated and daily poison, and if it escapes into sleeping rooms will not only be a great nuisance, but will be a deadly enemy to the health. Now that the cold has set in, multiplying the number of coal fires in our dwellings, a little attention and care in this particular may save many lives. Furnaces that allow gas to escape into the heating pipes are a great danger, and the leak should be stopped at the earliest opportunity.

German Workmen in England.

The importation of German masons and carpenters to supply the place of English artisans on strike has created no little commotion among artisans. In London and Manchester two batches of worthy Teutons have been seized upon by the indefatigable agents of the unions, and packed home again with singular despatch. At Wolverhampton a German band has also appeared, but so far they have not been spirited away. An over-riding meeting of builders' operatives has, however, been held in Wolverhampton to protest against the introduction by the employers of German artisans. Great indignation was expressed, and the action of the employers was strongly condemned. It was resolved to summon a meeting of the whole trade, to be held in the largest public hall. Several of the Germans were present, and, through an interpreter, expressed their satisfaction with their English masters. One employer has discharged forty of his men, because they struck against the importation of the foreigners. The English mechanics have decided to adopt measures to counteract the influence of the masters, and a resolution expressing a determination to continue the strike was adopted.

The Chinese in Australia.

JOHN BEING A CONTRABAND IS NOW WORTH £10 PER HEAD.

A correspondent of the London Times says he has the best authority for saying that the Queensland Goldfields Act has been confirmed by the Home Government. The principle of the matter appears to have been already taken for granted in the regulation which imposes a sort of customs duty of £10 upon every Chinaman who lands on the territory of the colony. What the Goldfields Act adds to this is a tax of £3 upon every Chinese miner, and of £10 upon every Chinaman who starts any other business. It is no doubt a delicate matter for the Imperial Government to refuse its sanction to an Act passed by a Colonial Legislature, but should the Chinese Government avail itself of the opportunity of rescinding its treaty with ourselves, and forbid us free entrance into its territories, what right shall we have to complain?

Portland, one of the suburbs of St. John, N. The whole of the block between Main, Acadia, Chapel, and Portland streets was destroyed, and many buildings on adjacent streets. So far only one life is known to have been lost, but several casualties have occurred. Active measures, in which the St. John Fire Relief Committee is co-operating, have been taken for the relief of the sufferers, and fully seven hundred of these were also sufferers from the great fire of the 20th of June.

Lord Dufferin in Manitoba

The London Times has editorials on Earl Dufferin's speeches in Manitoba. It says Lord Dufferin is a true cosmopolitan, and thoroughly understands one of the most comprehensive communities that philosophy ever imagined, or chance ever threw together—a community wanting scarcely any element that a true-hearted, sound-minded Englishman might desire. The Icelanders and Mennonites are happily circumstanced. In Manitoba, whither have emigrated the Mennonites who renounced Russia, Lord Dufferin says, soldiers are not wanted; till they carry arms to fight against earth-works, to achieve victories, not against nature, but over the powers and obstacles of Nature. Their victories are bloodless, their weapons unstained.

The employees of the seven Pennsylvania collieries that resumed at an advance of ten per cent, have been notified of a reduction of this amount. The miners are working under protest, and manifest displeasure that may assume a violent nature.

We called attention the other day to the foreign demand for barley in New York & Oswego, and the probability that Canada would soon have a direct trade with England in this cereal. On Friday and Saturday 4,000 bushels of Canadian barley were at New York in bond for shipment to English ports. Besides this amount, purchasers on the same market are known to have taken 50,000 bushels of New York & St. Lawrence, and 7,000 bushels of Western for export to Britain. We also learn that several cargoes were bought east of Toronto, to be sent by way of Montreal to the English markets. The prospect of a great trade in the product springing up is of the most gratifying kind. The intrinsic merit of the barley raised in Ontario over that produced in the States will place Canadian shippers in the most advantageous position with brewers of the older countries. If this trade develops we may be assured the barley of this country will be much sought after. Another feature of the trade deserves special attention at the present moment. Millers report that large quantities are being ground throughout the country for feeding cattle. This promises well for the revival of prices, a general improvement to all concerned, will clear the market of the surplus stock thought to be available even if it fails to effect a rise in prices, and a healthier level or state of business will thus be established. Malsters for the past two years and especially since the commencement of the present season, have been inclined to wait until stocks are well forward. This policy appears to be to hold back in purchases until supplies accumulate at Albany and New York, when they expect hold will finally give way, the market will break, and they can stock at low prices. The current trade will probably interfere with the hopes, and it has certainly within the past four days brightened the whole outlook for shippers and producers.

Belleville Justice.

THE ZWICKS' ISLAND OUTRAGE—THE PRISONER ACQUITTED.

At the Belleville Assizes on the 18th, Henry Cullen, Henry Geary, and Michael Nolan were charged with ravishing one Anna Maria Emsley, and Robt. Wesley was charged with abducting her. The case of Henry Cullen was first tried. The evidence of the girl Emsley was to the effect that on Friday evening, the 20th August last, she was returned to her home in town after looking for work in the country, when she was met in a lonely place by Robt. Wesley, who seized her and was forcing her to go along with him when a man named Wallace came along and he was obliged to let her go. He caught her again, however, and having gagged her, one Jones assisted in placing her in a boat. After roughly using her, Jones rowed her to Zwicks' island, she on her way trying to upset the boat, and he threatening to split her head with a paddle. The men kept her on the island during Saturday, boat loads of young men going there, and one after another violating her person. On Saturday night she was taken across to a barn by four of the gang, and back to the island on Sunday morning, when the scenes of the day before were repeated. Some twenty-eight or thirty men violated her before she was rescued on Sunday night by the police. Her clothes were torn from her back, leaving her almost naked. She had been subject to fits since, as a result of her injuries. Her evidence was contradicted in some essential particulars by the witnesses for the defence.

Japanese Competition with England.

The Birmingham Post publishes an extract from a letter received by a large manufacturing house in Birmingham from its agent in Japan. The writer says:—The Japanese are now making a number of articles which I formerly purchased from you, and at prices beyond the possibility of European competition. In fact, quite a number of different classes of merchandise are being made in this country, and Europeans are obliged to discontinue importing in consequence. This may appear somewhat strange to you; nevertheless, it is a fact. Bear in mind, Asiatics live as no other race can, and upon food which would not sustain a European house-dog. Frugal as badgers, industrious as bees, they undersell every labor market which they enter, and outdo every civilized artisan at his own trade. Anyone who sees a Japanese carpenter at work, with his toes for a vice, and his thighs and stomach for a bench, has his tools well used, and goods equal to European turned out. They will, in fact, become formidable rivals of all kinds of Western manufactures. The Japanese are always ready to learn, and to outvie everything that the West does, and this they do with less food, less air, less clothing, and less comfort than any civilized workman.

"Domestic infelicity," which newspaper reporters nowadays credit with playing such an important part in life's drama, is often the result of lingering or chronic disease. What husband or wife can be cheerful, smiling, and pleasant, when constantly suffering from the tortures of some dread disease? Perhaps the husband's liver becomes torpid, and he experiences bitter, disagreeable taste or nausea, has chilly sensations, alternating with great heat and dryness of the surface of his body, pain in his sides, shoulders, or back, eyes and skin are tinged with yellow, feels dull, indisposed, and dizzy. Through his suffering he becomes gloomy, despondent, and exceedingly irritable in temper. Instead of resorting to so reliable a remedy as a few small doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, and following up their action with the use of Golden Medical Discovery, to work the biliary poison out of the system and purify the blood, if he plays the part of a "penny wise and pound foolish" man he will attempt to economize by saving the small cost of these medicines. Continuing to suffer, his nervous system becomes impaired, and he is fretful and peevish—a fit subject to become embroiled in "domestic infelicity." Or the good wife may from her too laborious duties or family cares, have become subject to such chronic affections as are peculiarly incident to her sex, and being reduced in blood and strength, suffering from backache, nervousness, headache, internal fever, and enduring pains too numerous to mention, she may become peevish and fretful—anything but a genial helpmate. In this deplorable condition of ill health, should she act wisely and employ Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, it will in due time, by its cordial, tonic and nerve properties, restore her health and transform her from the peevish, scolding, irritable-tempered invalid to a happy, cheerful wife. Laying aside levity and speaking seriously, husbands and wives, you will find the Family Medicines above mentioned reliable and potent remedies. Four full particulars of their properties and uses, see Pierce's Memorandum Book, which is given away by all druggists.

Deaths From Drink.

James McMaster, one of the oldest settlers of North Orillia, went down to Washago to the store, became thoroughly drunk, fell out of his wagon going home, and was picked up dead. Thomas Hamilton, of Heathcote, Ont., once a temperate and good man took to the cup, which proved a fatal draught to him at last. It is said he drank thirty-two gallons of rye whiskey since June. Robert Hopkins, of Meaford, had been drinking excessively for some time past, and at last while in delirium tremens took an overdose of morphine, from which he died quite suddenly. A man—name unknown—had been drinking heavily at St. Hilaire P. Q., and in company with two companions started down the G. T. R. track, when he was struck by the engine and instantly killed. A printer named Armstrong was run over by an engine in the G. W. R. yard, in London, and so fearfully mangled that he only survived for two hours. He was intoxicated at the time of the accident. When near his death he asked if there were any young men around him, as he wished to advise them to beware of the intoxicating cup, to which he attributed his own coming end.—Tisc.

satisfaction at the time that men whose term of service had run out had asked permission before quitting to attend the new reading class. In the long Russian winters, with snow all round many feet deep, drilling impossible, and all out-of-door exercises impracticable, spelling and reading were welcomed as pleasant and profitable pastimes. Not only do the Russians buy, not only can they read, but they do read; and through the camp, and along the roadside, they may be seen in their spare hours, book in hand, alone or in small companies. It is a sight to do a man's heart good. It is but repeating what has been told me time after time by different parties in various parts of the country, that, speaking generally, the Russian soldier has yet to be discovered who would speak an irreverent word of the Holy Gospel, or who would knowingly venture to treat a Bible copier with harshness or contempt. Generally the title page of their New Testament has been to our men a more valuable credential, a more powerful recommendation, than either their passport or their license, and while common hawkers are strictly forbidden, our copiers have been joyfully welcomed. It has frequently been the case that the commanding officer has been the first to buy a number of copies, which he himself would distribute at once as a gift to the common soldiers around him.—Observer

Fearful Colliery Explosion.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THREE MEN IM PRISONED IN A MINE.

A terrible explosion occurred on Monday in a colliery at High Blantyre, near Glasgow, by which many lives are supposed to have been lost. At the time of the accident 233 men were in the mine, and it is feared that none of these were rescued except those in the immediate vicinity of the shaft at the time of the explosion. Exploring parties who have been down report forty corpses at the bottom of the shaft, and faint knocking was heard in an adjacent part of the mine. Owing to the poisonous gas the accompanying party could not prosecute their search, and were compelled to return. They made a second expedition, however, and reached a point within 170 fathoms of the imprisoned men, but it was feared that they would be unable to reach them in time to rescue them alive. The work of exploring the colliery at High Blantyre proceeded throughout Monday night. Four of the miners were discovered alive about eleven o'clock. One of them died before morning, and the case of another is hopeless. It is believed all the remaining have perished, but even if any are alive, no rescue party can reach them in less than eight or ten days. The bodies found are terribly burned and mangled.

The whole of the block between Main, Acadia, Chapel, and Portland streets was destroyed, and many buildings on adjacent streets. So far only one life is known to have been lost, but several casualties have occurred. Active measures, in which the St. John Fire Relief Committee is co-operating, have been taken for the relief of the sufferers, and fully seven hundred of these were also sufferers from the great fire of the 20th of June.

Disastrous Fire in Portland, N. B.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY WOODEN HOUSES DESTROYED—THREE OR FOUR PEOPLE BURNED TO DEATH—LOSS $300,000—INSURANCE $80,000.

Portland, one of the suburbs of St. John, N. B., was visited at 3 o'clock on Saturday morning by a disastrous fire, supposed to have been the work of incendiaries, by which 230 houses were destroyed and 2,300 people deprived of their homes. The whole of the block between Main, Acadia, Chapel, and Portland streets was destroyed, and many buildings on adjacent streets. So far as one life is known to have been lost, but several casualties have occurred. Active measures, in which the St. John Fire Relief Committee is co-operating, have been taken for the relief of the sufferers, and fully seven hundred of these were also sufferers the great fire of the 20th of June.

Lord Dufferin in Manitoba.

The London Times has editorials on Earl Dufferin's speeches in Manitoba. It says Lord Dufferin is a true cosmopolitan, and thoroughly understands one of the most comprehensive communities that philosophy ever imagined, or chance ever threw together—a community wanting scarcely any element that a true-hearted, sound-minded Englishman might desire. The Icelanders and Mennonites are happily circumstanced. In Manitoba, whither have emigrated the Mennonites who renounced Russia, Lord Dufferin says, soldiers are not wanted; all they carry arms to fight against earth-worms, to achieve victories, not against men, but over the powers and obstacles of Nature. Their victories are bloodless, their weapons unstrained.

The employees of the seven Pennsylvania collieries that resumed at an advance of ten per cent, have been notified of a reduction of this amount. The miners are working under protest, and manifest displeasure that may assume a violent nature.

We called attention the other day to the foreign demand for barley in New York and Oswego, and the probability that Canadians would soon have a direct trade with England in this cereal. On Friday and Saturday 4,000 bushels of Canadian barley sold at New York in bond for shipment to English ports. Besides this amount, purchasers on the same market are known to have taken 50,000 bushels of New York State barley, and 7,000 bushels of Western for export to Britain. We also learn that several cargoes were bought east of Toronto, to be sent by way of Montreal to the English markets. The prospect of a great trade in this product springing up is of the most gratifying kind. The intrinsic merit of the barley raised in Ontario over that produced in the States will place Canadian shippers in the most advantageous position with brewers in the older countries. If this trade develops we may be assured the barley of this country will be much sought after. Another feature of the trade deserves special attention at the present moment. Millers report that large quantities are being ground throughout the country for feeding cattle. This promises well for the revival of prices, and a general improvement to all concerned. It will clear the market of the surplus stocks thought to be available even if it fails to effect a rise in prices, and a healthier and livelier state of business will thus be ushered in. Millsters for the past two years, and especially since the commencement of the present season, have been inclined to wait until stocks are well forward. Their policy appears to be to hold back in purchases until supplies accumulate at Albany and New York, when they expect holders will finally give way, the market will break, and they can stock at low prices. The export trade will probably interfere with their hopes, and it has certainly within the past four days brightened the whole outlook for shippers and producers.

The brutal fellow was taken before the magistrates, who marked their sense of his offence by "binding him over to keep the peace for six months."

Many of the trades of Warwickshire (Eng.) are suffering from almost unparalleled depression. The ribbon trade is so bad that large numbers of those engaged therein have absolutely nothing to do, while 500 operatives have been thrown out of work by the closing of the Nuneaton Cotton Mill, which is about to be brought to the hammer. The coal and iron trades are also exceedingly inactive, while at Coventry, where watchmaking is extensively carried on, manufacturers complain that things have not been so bad for years.

Russian Soldiers and the Bible.

A member of the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society writes: More than 600,000 Bible and portions of the Scriptures have been brought lately by the soldiers of the Russian armies since they crossed the Pruth. Large editions have been required, and the books were sent from Vienna, Odessa, St. Petersburg, and London, necessarily at very high rates for carriages, and involving an expense of about £8,000. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who has conducted the arrangements, reports from Bucharest several interesting particulars as follows:—

"As to the Russians, we are one and all of opinion that their readiness to buy is unparalleled in our experience of the Society's Continental works. It is a strange thing, and yet not less true than strange, when fierce-looking Cossacks, armed to the teeth, thank you ten times over for having brought them the New Testament, and when they can scarce be retained in the gladness of their hearts from taking you in their bony arms to give you a well-meant, albeit none the less dreaded, hug of gratitude. And not only do the men buy, but they read for they can read, and that to an extent which has utterly surprised me. All the reports received by me agree in this particular, that there are comparatively few unable to read, and the explanation given by the common men, as well as by some of high rank, of the glad but strange fact is that since the introduction of general compulsory military service a few years ago, it has been made obligatory on all the subalterns and on the younger commissioned officers to see to it, as soon as the recruits enter the army, that they acquire the wholesome art of reading. Dr. Obmuller, the Grand Duke's physician, told me that the arrangement gave such satisfaction at the time that men whose term of service had run out had asked permission before quitting to attend the new reading-class. In the long Russian winters, with snow all round many feet deep, drilling impossible, and all out-of-door exercises impracticable, spelling and reading were welcomed as pleasant and profitable pastimes. Not only do the Russians buy, not only can they read, but they do read; and through the camp, and along the roadside, they may be seen in their spare hours, book in hand, alone or in small companies. It is a sight to do a man's heart good. It is but repeating what has been told me time after time by different parties in various parts of the country, that, speaking generally, the Russian soldier has yet to be discovered who would speak an irreverent word of the Holy Gospel, or who would knowingly venture to treat a Bible colporteur with harshness or contempt. Generally the title page of their New Testament has been to our men a more valuable credential, a more powerful recommendation, than either their passport or their license, and while common hawkers are strictly forbidden, our colporteurs have been joyfully welcomed. It has frequently been the case that the commanding officer has been the first to buy a number of copies, which he himself would distribute at once as a gift to the common soldiers around him.—Observer

PETTITT'S EYE-SALVE.
An Infallible Remedy for all Diseases of the Eye (acute or chronic), Granulation of the Lids, Ulceration of the Lacrymal Glands, Film, and Weakness of the Vision from any cause.
THE AMERICAN EYE-SALVE is presented to the public with the assurance of its efficiency as a curative of most diseases of the eye, acute or chronic inflammation, whether induced by scrofulous origin or otherwise, weakness or defect of vision, diminished tone of the optic nerve, or a diseased state of the tissues constituting that organ. Also, for all persons whose vocation requires an incessant action of the eyes, the Salve will act as a charm in restoring a uniform healthy action, where weakness, pain, and misery may have long threatened a fatal termination. It is the most simple, safe, and effectual remedy ever discovered. The materials of which it is made are pure, perfect, and costly, compounded with elaborate care and exactness, safe in its application, being used externally, and, of course, avoiding the pain and danger which necessarily attends the introduction of caustic minerals and eye-washes. RINGWORM and OLD CHRONIC SORES, of scrofulous origin, or resulting from whatever cause, yield to the AMERICAN EYE-SALVE. IT IS USED SUCCESSFULLY FOR PILES. Its soothing effect is immediate, and a permanent cure requires but a few applications. The proprietors of "DR. J. PETTITT'S AMERICAN EYE-SALVE," while making new and improved machinery for making a more perfect box for the Eye-Salve, have changed the Trade Mark on the cover so as to correspond with the Cut on the Wrapper, Circulars, Advertisements, etc. We call attention to this, as it might otherwise be regarded as counterfeiting.

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.
It is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages, and the chambers or cavities communicating therewith, in which some of the ulcers frequently exist, and from which the catarrhal discharge generally proceeds. The want of success in treating Catarrh heretofore has arisen largely from the impossibility of applying remedies to these cavities and chambers by any of the ordinary methods. This obstacle in the way of effecting cures is entirely overcome by the invention of the Douche. Its use is pleasant and so simple that a child can understand it. Full and explicit directions accompany each instrument. When used with this instrument, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures recent attacks of "Cold in the Head" by a few applications.

CATARRH
SYMPTOMS—Frequent headache, discharge falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, thick mucus, purulent, offensive, etc. In others, a dryness, dry, watery, weak, or inflamed eyes, stopping up, or obstruction, of nasal passages, ringing in ears, deafness, hawking and coughing to clear throat, ulcerations, scabs from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, unpaired or total deprivation of sense of smell and taste, dizziness, mental depression, loss of appetite, indigestion, enlarged tonsils, tickling cough, etc. Only a few of these symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, when used with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, and accompanied with the constitutional treatment which is recommended in the pamphlet that wraps each bottle of the Remedy, is a perfect specific for this loathsome disease. It is mild and pleasant to use, containing no strong or caustic drugs or poisons. The Catarrh Remedy is sold at 50 cents, Douche at 60 cents, by all Druggists.

CURES DISEASES OF THE THROAT, LUNGS, LIVER & BLOOD.
In the wonderful medicine to which the afflicted are above directed for relief, the discoverer believes he has combined in harmony more of Nature's sovereign curative properties, which God has instilled into the vegetable kingdom for healing the sick, than were ever before combined in one medicine. The evidence of this fact is found in the great variety of most obstinate diseases which it has been found to conquer. In the cure of Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, and the early stages of Consumption, it has astonished the medical faculty, and eminent physicians pronounce it the greatest medical discovery of the age. While it cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By its great and thorough blood-purifying properties, it cures all Humors, from the worst Scrofula to a common Blotch, Pimple, or Eruption. Mercurial disease, Mineral Poisons, and their effects, are eradicated, and vigorous health and a sound constitution established. Erysipelas, Salt-rheum, Fever Sores, Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all the numerous diseases caused by bad blood, are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sal- low color of skin, or yellowish brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alter- nated with hot flushes, low spirits, and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal, as it effects perfect cures, leaving the liver strengthened and healthy.

Our Indian Neighbors in the North-West.

After describing the magnificent country through which he had travelled. His Excellency continued as follows.—
 "But in contemplating thevista thus opened to our imagination, we must not forget that there ensues a corresponding expansion of our obligations. For instance, unless great care is taken, we shall find, as we move westwards, that the exigencies of civilization may clash injuriously with the prejudice and traditional habits of our Indian fellow-subjects. As long as Canada was in the woods the Indian problem was comparatively easy, the progress of settlement was slow enough to give ample time, and opportunity for arriving at an amicable and mutually convenient arrangement with each tribe with whom we successively came in contact; but once out upon the plains, colonization will advance with far more rapid and ungovernable strides, and it cannot fail eventually to interfere with the by no means inexhaustible supply of buffalo upon which so many of the Indian tribes are now dependent. Against the contingency it will be our most urgent and imperative duty to take timely precautions by enabling the red man, not by any undue pressure, or hasty, or ill-considered interference, but by precept, example, and suasion, by gifts of cattle and other encouragements, to exchange the precarious life of a hunter for that of a pastoral and eventually that of an agricultural people. (Applause.) Happily in no part of her Majesty's Dominions are the relations existing between the white settler and the original natives and masters of the land so well understood or so generously and humanely interpreted as in Canada, and as a consequence, instead of being a cause of anxiety and disturbance, the Indian tribes of the Dominion are regarded as a valuable adjunct to our strength and industry (Hear, hear, and applause.) Wherever I have been in the Province, and since I have been here, I have travelled nearly a thousand miles within your borders, I have found the Indians upon their several reserves, premitting a few petty grievances of a local character they thought themselves justified in preferring contented and satisfied, upon the most friendly terms with their white neighbors, and implicitly confiding in the good faith and paternal solicitude of the Government. (Applause.) In some districts I have learnt with pleasure that the Sioux, who some years since entered our territory under such sinister circumstances—I do not of course refer to the recent visit of Sitting Bull and his people, who, however, I believe, are remaining perfectly quiet—are not only peaceable and well-behaved, but have turned into useful and hardworking laborers and harvestmen, while in the more distant settlements, the less domesticated bands of natives, whether as hunters, voyageurs, guides, or purveyors of our furs and game, prove an appreciably advantageous element in the economical structure of the colony. (Applause.) There is no doubt that a great deal of the good feeling thus subsisting between the red man and ourselves is due to the influence and interposition of that invaluable class of men the half-breed settlers and pioneers of Manitoba—(loud applause)—who, combining as they do the hardihood, the endurance, and love of enterprise generated by the strain of Indian blood within their veins, with the civilization, the instruction, and the intellectual power derived from their fathers, have preached the gospel of peace and good will and mutual respect, with equally beneficent results, to the Indian chieftain in his lodge, and the British settler in his shanty. (Great applause.) They have been the ambassadors between the East and the West, the interpreters of civilization, and its exigencies to the dwellers on the prairie, as well as the exponents to the white man of the consideration justly due to the susceptibilities, the sensibilities, and respect

Workingmen's Coffee Houses.

To the Editor of the Mail.

Sir,—Knowing the deep interest you take in all that concerns "the working-man," I send this communication to your widely read paper, in order that the modest enterprise to which it directs attention may become more generally known.
 There is in Yonge street, Yorkville, a temperance coffee house, called "The Workingmen's;" it is situated near the brick fields, in which many men are employed, the proprietor of the house being one of the employees. Having occasion to require refreshment, I went into this house a few days ago. Everything about it was very clean and comfortable. I called for a pint of coffee, which was four cents, three slices of bread and nice butter, five cents. The table was furnished with the leading journals of the city, numerous magazines, pamphlets, and religious literature. While partaking of my meal the landlord came home for his. He was very friendly, and appeared to me to be a worthy and industrious man. After partaking of the refreshment we had some conversation relative to the enterprise; he said it was not much known, he had received assistance from many kind friends; his wife was the chief manager, and that it greatly pleased her, and he hoped it would do good and entice his companions and others to spend their earnings there and get instruction, and that it would prove a benefit and blessing. As he seemed disposed to be communicative, I asked him what success he had had; he said he was satisfied, it brought many of his neighbors together, and he trusted that good was done. He asked me up stairs, and there I found a much larger room, amply furnished, with every convenience for the comfort of visitors—desks, and more publications; it was very clean, nicely lighted, and comfortable. I could not help expressing the pleasure I felt in seeing such things, and wished him every success. He told me there was a weekly prayer meeting held there every Tuesday, commencing at eight o'clock, that it was free and open to all. With that I left resolved to attend the prayer meeting which I did last Tuesday night, and I was much pleased with all I saw and heard. The way in which it was conducted was admirable. The chairman opened the meeting by giving out a hymn, familiar to most, so that all present sang; he then besought by prayer the blessing of God the Father on their humble efforts after which he kindly solicited those present to join in the exercises, either by reading the scriptures, exhortation or prayer or praise. The encouragement thus held out was embraced by many, and altogether it was a delightful and profitable time, and all seemed to enjoy it as a "time of refreshing coming from the presence of the Lord."
 Now, if we had more of these Workingmen's Coffee Houses, conducted on these principles, don't you think it would materially bless and benefit all concerned? I think it would.

Yours,

J. G.

Good Walking Horses.

EDS. COUNTRY GENTLEMAN—A good horse should go well in all his paces. He should walk, trot and gallop in handsome style, and as a saddle horse, the first pace—that of walking—is the most important, for in warm weather, equestrians riding for pleasure, or on business, do not care to go faster, excepting now and then for a change, and to prevent being too long a time on the way. A perfectly good walker can go five miles in an hour with ease to himself and his rider, and, generally speaking, when a horse walks off at this rate gracefully and safely, without making any trips, he will be found to move well in his trot, and gallop well too. There is a wonderful amount

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum—or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible—Rubber, and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, in fact, when combined with the pure medicinal gum, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-continued Consumption.

Will Cure Consumption.

TO all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery and will send the recipe—FREE OF CHARGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

(Great applause.) They have been the ambassadors between the East and the West, the interpreters of civilization, and its exigencies to the dwellers on the prairie, as well as the exponents to the white man of the consideration justly due to the aboriginal race, the removal of their prejudices, the innate craving for justice of the Indian race. (Applause.) In fact they have done for the colony what otherwise would have been left unaccomplished and have introduced between the white population and the Red Man a traditional feeling of amity and friendship, which but for them it might have been impossible to establish. (Cheers.) Nor can I pass by the humane, kindly, and considerate attention which has ever distinguished the Hudson Bay Company in its dealings with the native population. (Applause.) But though giving due credit to these fortunate influences amongst the causes which are conducing to produce and preserve this fortunate result, the place of honor must be adjudged to that honorable and generous policy which has been pursued by successive Governments of Canada towards the Indian, and which at this moment, is being superintended and carried out with so much tact, discretion, and ability by your present Lieutenant-Governor—(applause)—under which the extinction of the Indian title upon liberal terms has invariably been recognised as a necessary preliminary to the occupation of a single square yard of native territory. (Cheering.)

Four Strange Girls

It will be a small drop of consolation to the thousands of honest house-wives who look upon servant girls as nuisances, to learn that there are four working girls in the city of Detroit whose plans and deeds are worthy of public mention. One of them, the oldest, came to this country from England about seven years ago. She was followed after a time by a second and a third and a fourth and during the last three years the four have held places in families in the same neighborhood. Each one began saving money from the first. They have made every effort to please the families employing them, and have consequently been paid extra wages. Every garment purchased by them has been for comfort and long wear, instead of for show and style. Two of them have never seen the city hall, though living in the city nearly three years. None of them have yet had a beau or had occasion to go to the stores in the evening. Each one can sew, patch, darn, put up fruit, make preserves, cook any dish, tack down a carpet, put up a stove, harness a horse, make her own clothes and trim her own hat. Each one has a bank account, and for several years past all have had a grand object in view. That object is now almost accomplished. A few weeks ago they united their savings and purchased a lot in the northern part of the city, 40x190 ft. in size. They then contracted with a builder for a cottage, which was ready for occupancy only two or three sent to join in the exercises, either by reading the scriptures, exhortation or prayer or praise. The encouragement thus held out was embraced by many, and altogether it was a delightful and profitable time, and all seemed to enjoy it as a "time of refreshing coming from the presence of the Lord."

A perfectly good walker can go five miles in an hour with ease to himself and his rider, and, generally speaking, when a horse walks off at this rate gracefully and safely, without making any trips, he will be found to move well in his trot, and gallop well too. There is a wonderful difference in horses. Some move so springy, and change their paces so easily, that it is like sitting in a rocking-chair, while others are so rough in their trot that it shakes a man so as to injure the watch he carries, and in galloping, some will do that pace so harshly that it is really unpleasant riding. For a man who travels a good deal on horseback, and who likes to take everything as easy as possible, the walk and the canter are the most suitable paces, for of all riding, the slow gallop called the canter is the easiest, and also the safest, next to the walk.

In England, where riding on horseback is so universal, the horses are trained to the walk, trot, canter and gallop. Old farmers, it is true, will be seen to amble along to market, and again on their way home, but it is unfashionable. In the Southern States, the amble (or movement faster and somewhat different) is called racking and pacing, and it is surprising how quickly and very easily to the rider the milestones are passed when seated on a good pacer or racker. Doubtless every colts should have great attention paid to his first pace—the walk—for it is the foundation of all others, and denotes usefulness. In fact, when a good horseman mounts an animal he wishes to try, and finds the walk free and good, he is at once impressed favourably, and a little remissness in the other paces will be pardoned if it is a young horse, hoping and expecting improvement will occur because of the good walking.

It is extraordinary that walking well is not appreciated in the United States, but rather it is much overlooked, and in some measure repudiated. As an instance: At the Orange County Agricultural Show, a gentleman offered a premium of $100 to be given to the best walkers, and although it was duly advertised, there were no horses brought to walk for the money. Setting aside saddle horses, how very important it is that farm horses should walk well—in short, it is the most essential pace on every farm.

Hints for October.

The well-to-do farmer now feels that there are many things which must be done before cold weather sets in, and these should not be put off for a more convenient season. It will not be found very cheerful or agreeable to complete work in a snow storm which might have been done in the beautiful sunshine. Therefore in this month let the winter quarters for stock be put in readiness for use any day. It is far better to be ready, even if no storm comes, than to have the storm come, and not be ready. It will take no more time now than to wait until the time repairs are needed, which will be a stormy one. Milch cows, and cattle intended for beef, as soon as the nights become cold and

The furniture was bought here and there, where cash would secure a bargain, and is good if not showy. Many little things were contributed by friends, and the little home is as neat as a pin. The eldest will now become a laundress, having already more work of that kind than she can do in four days of the week. She will keep house, and be a mother to and make a home for the rest. All own a share, and if sickness comes to one of the three still acting as servants, she has a place to go and some one to care for her. They will be planting trees, setting out vines and planning improvements as the weeks go by, each goodnaturedly striving to do more than the other, and the little home will keep their hearts pure and their minds free from giddy thoughts. Each Sabbath day they will gather there to feel that it is home, and to visit with and advise each other, and letters from father and mother across the wide ocean will be opened and read again and again through tearful eyes. Are there four other such girls in all this land?—Free Press.

Milch cows, and cattle intended for beef, as soon as the nights become cold and frosty, should be housed, and a little extra feed be given. There is much lost by neglect in this respect. There is nothing that will lessen the flow of a cow's milk so much (except sickness) as for her to lie out on cold and frosty nights. Cattle intended for the butcher may be neglected until winter, and, as far as we can see, not be losing any. Yet when we come to give them extra care, it will be some time before we can see any improvement, and the reason for this is that cattle fall away inwardly before they do outwardly, and before we can see any improvement this waste must be restored. With proper care it need not take place.—Country Gentleman.

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum—or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible—Rubber and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, is full of electricity, and when combined with the pure medicinal gums, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant once applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are likewise to those who have a COLIC of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-continued Consumption.

Will Cure Consumption.

To all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan:—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery and will send the recipe—FREE OF CHARGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. Sent by return mail by addressing with 2 stamps naming this paper, Dr. O. R. Brigham, Drawer 28, Utica, N. Y. 19-ly.

THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps. The celebrated author of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Five Years' Sickness Cured by Four Bottles of Constitutional Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Legs, and Droppings in Throat Disappear.
ST. ASHARD, P. Q., Sept. 12, 1876.

Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.
DEAR SIR,—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your Constitutional Catarrh Remedy, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 27 years old, had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit. I continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and a swelling in my right lung as though there was a weight bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy. I took a bottle, which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite, and was able to endure hard and continued labor, such as chopping and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly,

"THE GREATEST G NAPANEE ON

An Autumn Song.

Now gently falls the fading light,
The Autumn's sunset veil,
While dusky grows the wavering light
Of whip-poor-will and quail.
The grain is bound, the nuts are brown
On every wooded hill:
The light is softened on the down,
And silvered on the rill.

The partridge drums; the plover's call
Salutes the sportsman's ear,
And just above the water-fall
The fisher sets his weir.
The reddened leaves with withered wings
Sweep lightly to the sod,
And Autumn walks the land and sings,
With rustling sandals shod.

A QUEER CLUE.

A Story by an Ex-Detective.

CHAPTER I.

As an ex-detective, I am often asked to relate my adventures, and at one time was ready enough to do so; but I found that my tales were looked upon dull, prosy things, and not at all what detectives ought to have to say themselves. Everybody seemed to think that detectives ought to find things by a sort of magical divination; but was reckoned a pretty good one, and have known some of our greatest celebrities; and the only way any of us found anything out was by inquiring everybody who was likely to know a li-keeping our eyes on any probable pa-holding our tongues and putting all scraps together. Now and then we befriended by a lucky chance; and when this happens we get a hundred times more praise than when we puzzled out the darkest and toughest case. The last fair I was ever engaged in was of kind. I was concerned in it two years before I left the police, after, by-the-
I had quite given up the detective brain and I resumed it three years after I left the police; and this is how it occurred. I must first say, however, that don't at all regard this as one of the dprosy cases I referred to; in fact, it the most exciting business I was ever gaged in.

I had left the detective work, as I and indeed had left London, for which grew a little tired of the business I recommended to the authorities at best, a thriving market town inof the home counties; and I had a comfortable situation there, having to do, very good pay, and being head the borough police. Of course there great deal of difference between life the country and life in town, and from a policeman's view it perhaps appeared greater than it does to any one else; whereas I had often wondered how a body could be detected in London, I equally surprised to think how any could hope to escape in the country; excepting when strangers came down some carefully planned burglary, could nearly always tell where to
for our men if anything went wrong; short, I knew everybody. As a mat-of course everybody knew me.

There was a middle-aged party lived in a quiet row of houses in Ore-street—which ran parallel with our H street—a Miss Parkway, who was repu-

she told. I had my attention drawn to her by seeing her walking repeatedly with a young man of no very good character, who was fully 20 years her junior and at last I heard she was going to be married to him. All the town professes to be surprised and shocked at this, but wasn't. Whether detectives get hard of heart in such things or not, I can't say but nothing in the way of a woman five and forty marrying a man of five-and-twenty would ever surprise me, nor should I be surprised at the man marrying the woman if she had money, as in this case. After all, although I have said John Lytherly—that was his name—was of no very good character, yet there was no thing serious against him. He was a good-tempered, good-looking, easy sort of a fellow, with a lot of cleverness about him, too, that always showed itself when it wasn't wanted; and never showed itself when it might be of service. He not called himself a photographer; but had been a solicitor's clerk, an actor, a traveler for a wine merchant, a barman, and had once, before his mother died been bought out of the lancers. However, he was now pretty well known that John was going to marry Miss Parkway, and half the young chaps in Combestead ridiculed and envied him by turns.

Matters progressed so far that it was known the lady had given orders to Bunnymann & Company, our chief bankers, to call in a thousand pounds of money which was out on mortgage; and it was said she intended to buy one of the houses in the High street and fit it up as a photographer's. It was also reported that old Mr. Bunnymann said: "I hope Miss Parkway that whatever you do will pay in money, you will do nothing that you have not well considered." And it is also said that Miss Parkway replied: "If I wanted to be preached to, Mr. Bunnyman, I should go to your brother, the Ranter," perhaps because Mr. Bunnyman had a brother who preached, though he wasn't a ranter at all. However, as these two were by themselves, I don't see how any one could have known what passed; and these confidential conversations in books and histories are certain things I don't believe in.

It was known for certain, however, that she had not only given notice, but had actually withdrawn the money; and among other things, it was said that she had admitted to her landlady, Mrs. Amoliss that the match with Lytherly would break off all intimacy with her friends. She only had one relative who came to see her, and that was a gentleman living some 40 miles away, but he had not been to Combestead lately. Whether he was offended or not, neither the landlady nor the lodger could say; but the latter feared he was, as she had written and told him exactly how affairs stood and what step she had taken, but had received no reply to her letter. Lytherly seemed, very naturally to be brightening up, and took our peculiar congratulations—for I had my say as well as the others—in a good tempered although rather a conceited style. One annoyance, he felt, which was that everybody to whom he owed money—which was every one who would trust him—was anxious to be the first paid; and thinking that a little gentle pressure might help them, two or three of the tradesmen took out County Court summonses against him; and this, as he said, was very hard on him and very selfish. However, there seemed a little chance that they would defeat themselves for, harassed and worried by these doings, he was forced to ask Miss Parkway for an advance of money, being the first time he had ever done so. He had received money from her, but she had always offered it, and pressed it upon him when he made a show, if he was not actually in earnest, of wishing to refuse it. Whether she was in a bad temper at the time, or whether she was hurt at his making such a request, Lytherly could not say, but she refused to make the advance and they parted worse friends than they had been for some time.
 All this the young fellow let out at the

An Autumn Song.

Now gently falls the fading light,
The Autumn's sunset veil,
While dusky grows the wavering flight
Of whip-poor-will and quail.
The grain is bound, the nuts are brown
On every wooded hill:
The light is softened on the down,
And silvered on the rill.

The partridge drums; the plover's call
Salutes the sportsman's ear,
And just above the water-fall
The fisher sets his weir.
The reddened leaves with withered wings
Sweep lightly to the sod,
And Autumn walks the land and sings,
With rustling sandals shod.

A QUEER CLUE.

A Story by an Ex-Detective.

CHAPTER I.

As an ex-detective, I am often asked to relate my adventures, and at one time I was ready enough to do so; but I soon found that my tales were looked upon as dull, prosy things, and not at all like what detectives ought to have to say for themselves. Everybody seemed to think that detectives ought to find things out by a sort of magical divination; but I was reckoned a pretty good one, and I have known some of our greatest celebrities; and the only way any of us ever found anything out was by inquiring of everybody who was likely to know a little keeping our eyes on any probable party, holding our tongues and putting all the scraps together. Now and then we are befriended by a lucky chance; and when this happens we get a hundred times more praise than when we puzzled out the darkest and toughest case. The last affair I was ever engaged in was of this kind. I was concerned in it two years before I left the police, after, by-the-bye, I had quite given up the detective branch; and I resumed it three years after I had left the police; and this is how it occurred. I must first say, however, that I don't at all regard this as one of the dull, prosy cases I referred to; in fact, it was the most exciting business I was ever engaged in.

I had left the detective work, as I said, and indeed had left London, for when I grew a little tired of the business I was recommended to the authorities at Combestead, a thriving market town in one of the home counties; and I had a very comfortable situation there, having little to do, very good pay, and being head of the borough police. Of course there is a great deal of difference between life in the country and life in town, and from a policeman's view it perhaps appears greater than it does to any one else; and whereas I had often wondered how anybody could be detected in London, I was equally surprised to think how anybody could hope to escape in the country; for, excepting when strangers came down on some carefully planned burglary, we could nearly always tell where to look for our men if anything went wrong; in short, I knew everybody. As a matter of course everybody knew me.

There was a middle-aged party who

Bell on the Saturday, as the refusal happened on the Friday. A great part of it in my hearing, for I generally took my pipe and glass at the Bell, and I saw that he was well on for tipsy. He had indeed been drinking there some hours, and would perhaps have stopped longer, but that the landlord persuaded him to go home. He was hardly able to walk, and as I did not wish him to get into any trouble, which might mean also trouble to me, I followed him to the door, determined I would see him to his lodgings if necessary, but just then his landlady's son happened to come by. The poor chap, as I well remember, had been to the dentist to have a tooth drawn, but his face was so swollen that Mr. Clawes would not attempt to draw it till daylight, and the poor fellow was half distracted with pain. He offered to see Lytherly home, and as he lived in the same house and slept in the same room, of course he was the fittest party to do so; and so off they went together, and in due course of time I went home too.

Next day was Sunday, and a quiet day enough it always was in Combestead. Younger men might have thought it dull but it suited me. I had lived 50 years in London, and did not object to the steady-going ways of the little town; in fact I took to going to church, and all sorts of things. Well, the day passed by without anything particular, and I was really thinking of going to bed, although it was only 9:30 for I felt sleepy and tired, when I heard somebody run hurriedly up our front garden, and then followed a very loud double knock at the door. I lived, I should mention, at a nice house in Church street, which was a turning that led from the High street into Orchard street, where, as I have said, Miss Parkway lived. I was just about to drink a glass of egg-nog, which is a thing I am very partial to when I have a cold, and this was Winter time; but I put the tumbler down to listen, for when such a hurried step and knock came, it was nearly always for me; and sure enough, in another half-minute the door was opened, and I heard a voice ask if the Superintendent was in; then, without any tapping or waiting, my door was thrown open, and I saw a young woman whom I knew as servant to Mrs. Armbliss. The moment I saw her I knew something serious was the matter; long experience enabled me to decide when anything really serious was coming.

"Now, Jane," I said, "what is it?"
"Oh, Mr. Robinson!" she exclaimed, (I forget whether I have mentioned before that my name is Robinson, but such is the fact;) "come round at once to Missus's for we have found poor Miss Parkway stone-dead and murdered in her room."

And with that, with a matter of course with such people, off she went into strong hysterics. I couldn't stop with her; so I opened my door, and equally as a matter of course, there I found the landlady and her servant listening. "Go in and take care of that girl," I said; "and one of you bring her round to Orchard street as soon as she can walk." I didn't go to blow them up and they were too

DIPHTHERIA.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST AND PREVENT ITS SPREAD.

The following recommendations, published by the Cleveland Health Officer, order to benefit those not familiar with the care of this dangerous disease, may be useful to many in this city, where many are at present suffering from it.

Since diphtheria, in a great degree, seen to be caused or at least aggravated, filth, especially from that arising from accumulations of manure, decaying vegetable matter or other garbage, night soil or other materials liable to decomposition from stagnant water, defective drainage, etc., it is necessary to keep the premises in every particular as clean as possible. Slop waters should not be thrown up to the ground, to soak into it. Sleeping rooms should not connect directly with the sewers, from which dangerous gas may arise. Good ventilation is very important, as is also a pure water supply.

Children should be thoroughly protected against all undue exposure to cold and dampness.

As the disease is contagious, sometimes highly so, it is very necessary, when case occurs in any family, to place the sick person in a room apart from the other inmates of the house. If this is not practicable the isolation should be made as complete as possible; the nursing should be performed as far as possible by one person. This course should be pursued even in suspected cases, without even waiting to be advised up to this point by a physician. Visitors to the infected house should be warned of the presence of a contagious disease therein, and children particularly should not be admitted.

Keep your children away from the house, and from intercourse with the inmates of houses where the disease prevails.

As there is every probability that diphtheria is contagious after death, the funeral services should be strictly private from the house and not from the church and the corpse should not be exposed to view. Do not allow your children to attend the funerals of those who may have died from this disease.

At the outset the disease is very often insidious, no local symptoms being complained of nor recognized by the parent until too late for successful treatment. Examine your children's throats from time to time, and if any undue redness or swelling is discovered, or, if you are in doubt in regard to appearances, send immediately for your physician in order that treatment, if it is necessary, should be commenced early. This is important since the disease is much more successful

As a matter of course everybody knew me.

There was a middle-aged party who lived in a quiet row of houses in Orchard street—which ran parallel with our High street—a Miss Parkway, who was reputed to be pretty well off, although not extremely rich, and reputed also to be rather eccentric. She lived by herself, in the sense of having none of her relatives with her; but there were other persons, although not many, in the large house where she lodged. I had my attention drawn to her by seeing her walking repeatedly with a young man of no very good character, who was fully 20 years her junior, and at last I heard she was going to be married to him. He now called himself a photographer; but had been a solicitor's clerk, an actor, a traveller for a wine merchant, a barman, and had once, before his mother died, been bought out of the lancers. However, it was now pretty well known that John was going to marry Miss Parkway, and half the young chaps in Combestead ridiculed and envied him by turns.

Matters progressed so far that it was known the lady had given orders to Bunnymann & Company, our chief bankers, to call in a thousand pounds of her money which was out on mortgage; and it was said she intended to buy one of the houses in the High street and fit it up as a photographer's. It was also reported that old Mr. Bunnymann said: "I hope, Miss Parkway, that whatever you do with your money, you will do nothing that you have not well considered." It was known for certain, however, that she had not only given notice, but had actually withdrawn the money; and among other things, it was said that she had admitted to her landlady, Mrs. Amoliss, that the match with Lytherly would be a chard street, where, as I have said, Miss Parkway lived. I was just about to drink a glass of egg-nog, which is a thing I am very partial to when I have a cold, and this was Winter time; but I put the tumbler down to listen, for when such a hurried step and knock came, it was nearly always for me; and sure enough, in another half-minute the door was opened, and I heard a voice ask if the Superintendent was in; then, without any tapping or waiting, my door was thrown open, and I saw a young woman whom I knew as servant to Mrs. Amoliss. "Go in and take care of that girl," I said; "and one of you bring her round to Orchard street as soon as she can walk." I didn't go to blow them up and they were too glad to escape to say a word; so off I went, and found a little cluster of people gathered round the gate of the house. "Here is the Superintendent!" I heard them say as they made way for me. I hurried through, but had no occasion to knock at the door, for they were on the watch for me. Mr. and Mrs. Amoliss were in the passage, and a neighbor from next door; all looked as pale and flurried as people do under the circumstances.

"This is a most terrible affair, Sir," says poor old Amoliss, who was a feeble, superannuated bank clerk. "We have sent for you, Sir, and the doctor, as being the best we could do. But perhaps you would like to go into her room at once?"

I said I should, as a matter of course, and they led me to her room. There was a light there, and they brought more up, so that everything was plainly visible. The people had not liked, or had been afraid to disturb anything, so the room was in the same state as when they had entered it. It appeared they had not been surprised at Miss Parkway not coming down in the morning, for this was not uncommon with her; but when the afternoon and evening passed away and she did not appear, and no answer was returned to their rapping at her door, they gave alarm, and at last forced an entrance, when they found the furniture in confusion, as though a struggle had taken place, and poor Miss Parkway in her night dress lying on her face quite dead. They had lifted her on to the bed, and from the marks on her throat had judged she died from strangulation. As I could do no good to her, I noticed as closely as I was able the appearance of the room, and especially looked for any fragments of cloth torn from an assailant's clothes, which often remain after a struggle; or a dropped weapon, or any unused mark. But I could see nothing. There was no difficulty in deciding how the assassin had entered the apartment and how he had left it, for the room was on the ground floor, and the lower sash of one of the windows was thrown up, although the blind was drawn fully down. The furniture was knocked over and upset; the washstand which was a large and somewhat peculiar one, of a clumsy and old-fashioned description, had been everthrown, and had fallen into the fire place, where it lay resting on the bars in a very curious manner; while the jug had fallen into the grate, deluging the fire-place with water, but, extraordinary to relate, without being broken to pieces, at any rate, although badly cracked. A great deal of noise had probably been made, and cries of help probably uttered; but Amoliss and his wife were both deaf, and they and the servant all slept at the other inmates of the house. If this is not practicable the isolation should be made as complete as possible; the nursing should be performed as far as possible by one person. This course should be pursued even in suspected cases, without even waiting to be advised upon this point by a physician. Visitors to the infected house should be warned of the presence of a contagious disease there, and children particularly should not be admitted.

Keep your children away from the house, and from intercourse with the inmates of houses where the disease prevails.

As there is every probability that diphtheria is contagious after death, the funeral services should be strictly private, from the house and not from the church, and the corpse should not be exposed to view. Do not allow your children to attend the funerals of those who may have died from this disease.

At the outset the disease is very often insidious, no local symptoms being complained of nor recognized by the parents until too late for successful treatment. Examine your children's throats from time to time, and if any undue redness or swelling is discovered, or, if you are in doubt in regard to appearances, send immediately for your physician in order that treatment, if it is necessary, should be commenced early. This is important, since the disease is much more successfully treated in its early stages than later, when it may terminate fatally in spite of all treatment. These precautions should be taken without fail, and where the disease has already attacked one member of the family, daily inspection should be made of the throats of all the other members. During the prevalence of diphtheria suspicion should always be excited when a child complains of a sore throat, or when, without any complaint it is languid, feverish, and has a discharge from its nostrils.

The furniture of the room, in all cases where it is possible, should be such as to admit of cleaning, and all extra articles, such as window drapery, woollen carpets, and others of a similar nature, should be removed from the room during the sickness. This is necessary on account of the liability of these articles to retain the contagion of the disease. After recovery it is always well to dry-rub the walls of the room with cloths, which should be immediately burned, and the floor washed with soap and water, to which carbolic acid may be added in the proportion of one pint to three or four gallons. All clothing after death should be thoroughly boiled, or still better, burned.

As there is every reason to believe that in every city many contagious diseases are widely spread by means of the schools, no child should be allowed to attend school when diphtheria exists in the family, nor when it has itself any symptoms, no matter how slight, which would arouse suspicion, nor when it is convalescent from the disease, until the attending physician deems it perfectly safe for it so to do.

During sickness the discharges from the throat and nose should not be allowed to remain in the room. If collected in a vessel they should be disinfected by carbolic acid, chloride of zinc, &c., and then effectually removed. These disinfectants should be used somewhat freely in the sick room. All cloths or rags used about the patient should be immediately buried. Such articles as towels, handkerchiefs, &c., which can not be destroyed, should not be used in connection with the patient. All clothes and bedding used by the patient should be, upon removal, boiled for an hour or more in a weak solution of chloride of lime. All such should be washed by themselves. It would also be well for those in attendance upon the patient to wash their hands in a weak solution of carbolic acid.

with a young man of no very good character, who was fully 20 years her junior, and at last I heard she was going to be married to him. All the town professed to be surprised and shocked at this, but I wasn't. Whether detectives get hard of heart in such things or not, I can't say, but nothing in the way of a woman five-and-forty marrying a man of five-and-twenty would ever surprise me, nor should I be surprised at the man marrying the woman if she had money, as in this case. After all, although I have said John Lytherly—that was his name—was of a very good character, yet there was no thing serious against him. He was a good-tempered, good-looking, easy sort of a fellow, with a lot of cleverness about him, too, that always showed itself when it wasn't wanted, and never showed itself when it might be of service. He now called himself a photographer; but had been a solicitor's clerk, an actor, a traveler for a wine merchant, a barman, and had once, before his mother died, been bought out of the lancers. However, it was now pretty well known that John was going to marry Miss Parkway, and half the young chaps in Combestead ridiculed and envied him by turns.

Matters progressed so far that it was known the lady had given orders to Bunnymann & Company, our chief bankers, to call in a thousand pounds of her money which was out on mortgage; and it was said she intended to buy one of the houses in the High Street and fit it up as a photographer's. It was also reported that old Mr. Bunnymann said: "I hope, Miss Parkway, that whatever you do with your money, you will do nothing that you have not well considered." And it is also said that Miss Parkway replied: "If I wanted to be preached to, Mr. Bunnymann, I should go to your brother, the Renter," perhaps because Mr. Bunnymann had a brother who preached, though he wasn't a ranter at all. However, as these two were by themselves, I don't see how any one could have known what passed; and these confidential conversations in books and histories are certainly things I don't believe in.

It was known for certain, however, that she had not only given notice, but had actually withdrawn the money; and among other things, it was said that she had admitted to her landlady, Mrs. Amoliss, that the match with Lytherly would break off all intimacy with her friends. She only had one relative who came to see her, and that was a gentleman living some 40 miles away, but he had not been to Combestead lately. Whether he was offended or not, neither the landlady nor the lodger could say; but the latter feared he was, as she had written and told him exactly how affairs stood and what steps she had taken, but had received no reply to her letter. Lytherly seemed, very naturally to be brightening up, and took our jocular congratulations—for I had my say as well as the others—in a good-tempered although rather a conceited style. One annoyance, he felt, which was that everybody to whom he owed money—which was every one who would trust him—was anxious to be the first paid; and, thinking that a little gentle pressure might help them, two or three of the tradesmen took out County Court summonses against him; and this, as he said, was very hard on him and very selfish. However, there seemed a little chance that they would defeat themselves, for, harassed and worried by these doings, he was forced to ask Miss Parkway for an advance of money, being the first time he had ever done so. He had received money from her, but she had always offered it, and pressed it upon him when he made a show, if he was not actually in earnest, of wishing to refuse it. Whether she was in a bad temper at the time, or whether she was hurt at his making such a request, Lytherly could not say, but she refused to make the advance, and they parted worse friends than they had been for some time.

"This is a most terrible affair, Sir," says poor old Amblyss, who was a feeble, superannuated bank clerk. "We have sent for you, Sir, and the doctor, as being the best we could do. But perhaps you would like to go into her room at once?"

I said I should, as a matter of course, and they led me to her room. There was a light there, and they brought more up, so that everything was plainly visible. The people had not liked, or had been afraid to disturb anything, so the room was in the same state as when they had entered it. It appeared they had not been surprised at Miss Parkway not coming down in the morning, for this was not uncommon with her; but when the afternoon and evening passed away and she did not appear, and no answer was returned to their rapping at her door, they gave alarm, and at last forced an entrance, when they found the furniture in confusion, as though a struggle had taken place, and poor Miss Parkway in her night dress lying on her face quite dead. They had lifted her on to the bed, and from the marks on her throat had judged she died from strangulation. As I could do no good to her, I noticed as closely as I was able the appearance of the room, and especially looked for any fragments of cloth torn from an assassin's clothes, which often remain after a struggle; or a dropped weapon, or any unused mark. But I could see nothing. There was no difficulty in deciding how the assassin had entered the apartment and how he had left it, for the room was on the ground floor, and the lower sash of one of the windows was drawn fully down. The furniture was knocked over and upset; the washstand which was a large and somewhat peculiar one, of a clumsy and old-fashioned description, had been everthrown, and had fallen into the fireplace, where it lay resting on the bars in a very curious manner; while the jug had fallen into the grate, deluging the fire-place with water, but, extraordinary to relate, without being broken to pieces, at any rate, although badly cracked. A great deal of noise had probably been made, and cries of help probably uttered; but Amblyss and his wife were both deaf, and they and the servant all slept at the top of the big house in the front, while poor Miss Parkway slept at the bottom at the back, and in a room which was built from the house itself.

The furniture of the room, in all cases where it is possible, should be such as to admit of cleaning, and all extra articles, such as window drapery, woollen carpets, and others of a similar nature, should be removed from the room during the sickness. This is necessary on account of the liability of these articles to retain the contagion of the disease. After recovery it is always well to dry-rub the walls of the room with cloths, which should be immediately burned, and the floor washed with soap and water, to which carbolic acid may be added in the proportion of one pint to three or four gallons. All clothing after death should be thoroughly boiled, or still better, turned.
As there is every reason to believe that in every city many contagious diseases are widely spread by means of the schools, no child should be allowed to attend school when diphtheria exists in the family, nor when it has itself any symptoms, no matter how slight, which would arouse suspicion, nor when it is convalescent from the disease, until the attending physician deems it perfectly safe for it so to do.

During sickness the discharges from the throat and nose should not be allowed to remain in the room. If collected in a vessel they should be disinfected by carbolic acid, chloride of zinc, &c., and then effectually removed. These disinfectants should be used somewhat freely in the sick room. All cloths or rags used about the patient should be immediately burned. Such articles as towels, handkerchiefs, &c., which can not be destroyed, should not be used in connection with the patient. All clothes and bedding used by the patient should be, upon removal, boiled for an hour or more in a weak solution of chloride of lime. All such should be washed by themselves. It would also be well for those in attendance upon the patient to wash their hands in a weak solution of carbolic acid.

German Wives.
The culinary art forms a part of the education of the women in Germany. The well-to-do tradesmen like the mechanic, takes pride in seeing his daughters good house-keepers. To effect this object the girl, on leaving school, which she does when about fourteen years of age, goes through the ceremony of confirmation, and then is placed by her parents with a country gentleman, or in a large family, where she remains one or two years, filling what may also be termed the post of servant, or doing the work of one. This is looked upon as an apprenticeship to domestic economy. She differs from a servant, however, in this—she receives no wages; on the contrary, her parents pay for care taken of her, as well as her clothing. This is the first step in her education as housekeeper. She next passes, on the same conditions, into the kitchen of a rich private family, or into that of a hotel of good repute. Here she has control of the expenditures of the servants employed in it, and assists personally in the cooking, but is always addressed as Miss, and is treated by the family with deference and consideration. Many daughters of rich families receive similar training, with this difference, however, that they receive it in a princely mansion or a royal residence. There is a reigning queen in Germany at the present time who was trained in this way. Consequently the women in Germany are perfect models of economy.

A couple were married in Goderich, Ont., last week—the bridegroom being 77 and the bride 58. Both looked fresh.

DIPHTHERIA.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST AND PREVENT ITS SPREAD.

The following recommendations, published by the Cleveland Health Officer, in order to benefit those not familiar with the care of this dangerous disease, may be useful to many in this city, where so many are at present suffering from it:—

Since diphtheria, in a great degree, seems to be caused or at least aggravated, by filth, especially from that arising from accumulations of manure, decaying vegetable matter or other garbage, night soil, or other materials liable to decomposition, from stagnant water, defective drainage, etc., it is necessary to keep the premises in every particular as clean as possible. Slop waters should not be thrown upon the ground, to soak into it. Sleeping rooms should not connect directly with the sewers, from which dangerous gases may arise. Good ventilation is very important, as is also a pure water supply.

Children should be thoroughly protected against all undue exposure to cold and dampness.

As the disease is contagious, sometimes highly so, it is very necessary, when a case occurs in any family, to place the sick person in a room apart from the other inmates of the house. If this is not practicable the isolation should be made as complete as possible; the nursing should be performed as far as possible by one person. This course should be pursued even in suspected cases, without even waiting to be advised upon this point by a physician. Visitors to the infected house should be warned of the presence of a contagious disease there in, and children particularly should not be admitted.

Keep your children away from the house, and from intercourse with the inmates of houses where the disease prevails.

As there is every probability that diphtheria is contagious after death, the funeral services should be strictly private, from the house and not from the church, and the corpse should not be exposed to view. Do not allow your children to attend the funerals of those who may have died from this disease.

At the outset the disease is very often insidious, no local symptoms being complained of nor recognized by the parents until too late for successful treatment. Examining your children's throats from time to time, and if any undue redness or swelling is discovered, or, if you are in doubt in regard to appearances, send immediately for your physician in order that treatment, if it is necessary, should be commenced early. This is important, since the disease is much more success-

A WEALTHY CHURCH.

HOW CATHOLIC PROPERTY HAS INCREASED IN CANADA

The arrival and probable permanent settlement of the delegate apostolic—for his labors will take many a long day to complete—prompt a consideration of the relations of the church in Canada with the Vatican. Long before the British conquest the church had made invaluable acquisitions of land in Canada. Wherever there was arable soil, good fishing, and forests privileges, there the church settled. She became possessed, in the seminary of St. Sulpice, of the islands of Montreal and Jesus, and vast tracts on the Ottawa, in which the Oka district is included. She owns the better part of Quebec, and all through the Province her possessions are immense. There are in the city of Montreal alone, belongings to the various church organizations, exempt from taxation, lands valued at fifteen millions of dollars. Of this, two-thirds are the property of the Roman Catholic bodies. But outside of the regular church properties comprised under the heads of churches, presbyteries, convents, seminaries, hospitals and schools, there is a vast amount of wealth invested in buildings. The nuns have immense possessions in the commercial heart of the city. The nuns, in fact, are the smartest business people in the church. They manage their concerns with infinite ability, and pile up property in a way to make financiers and capitalists who call themselves shrewd, tear their hair. As they saw the business of the city increasing along St. Paul street, they cut up their vast domain into building lots and ran up massive warehouses. The Gray and the Black nuns took time by the forelock when Montreal was growing, and provided commerce with the most spacious and convenient of quarters. They ran up the value of property wherever they operated, and in this way were benefactors to the owners of real estate. And as land increased in foot value, up went the rents, until they commanded the very best figures in Montreal. In order to accommodate the progress of trade, they tore down, with a ruthless hand, the religious houses that had been land marks for nearly two centuries; they banished iniquity in favor of capital, verily they have had their reward. Their tenants are mostly Protestants—say in the proportion of 11 to 3—and from these Protestants they derive an immense income. They are good proprietors, invariably endeavoring to make the tenant as comfortable as possible, and and bring him to feel that he is getting the value of his money. No tenant is ever heard complaining of the way in which he is treated by the nuns. But he must be sharp with his payments, or he will find the bailiffs down on him in a hurry.—Chicago Times' Montreal Letter.

Last Lay of the Min-stor-el.

An organ man stood at a cottage door,
And played as he never played before.
The breeze his awarthy features tanned,
As he turned the crank with a willing hand,
His dark eyes shone like diamonds bright,
And he played away till his hair grew white,
His monkey, in scarlet and feathers dressed,
Was dancing as though by a fiend possessed.

A musket placed on a window frame—
A loud report—and a sheet of flame.
The organ played, as it heavenward hied,
"The Minstrel boy for his country died."
The monkey was into pieces blown,
And the organ man died without a groan,
And they talk of the spot where the grinder fell
As the last very lay of the Min-stor-el.

THE MENONNITE AND ICELANDIC SETTLERS—THEIR RAPID PROGRESS.

(Extract from Lord Dufferin's speech at Winnipeg, Manitoba.)

But our Indian friends and neighbors are by no means the only alien communities in Manitoba which demand the solicitude of the Government and excite our sympathies and curiosity. In close proximity to Winnipeg, two other communities, the Menonrites and Icelanders, starting from opposite ends of Europe, without either concert or communication, have sought fresh homes within our territory, the one of Russian extraction, though German race, moved by a desire to escape from the obligations of a law which was repulsive to their conscience, the other bred among the snows and ashes of an Arctic volcano, by the hope of bettering their material condition. (Applause.) Although I have witnessed many sights to cause me pleasure during my various progresses through the Dominion, seldom have I beheld any spectacle more pregnant with prophecy, more fraught with promise of a successful future than the Menonrite Settlement. (Applause.) When I visited these interesting people they had only been two years in the Province, and yet in a long ride I took across many miles of prairie, which but yesterday was absolutely bare, desolate, and untenanted, the home of the wolf, the badger, and the eagle, I passed village after village, homestead after homestead, furnished forth with all the conveniences and incidents of European comfort, and a scientific agriculture, while on either side the road, corn fields already ripe for harvest, and pastures populous with herds of cattle stretched away to horizon. (Great applause.) Even on this continent—the peculiar theatre of rapid change and progress—there has nowhere, I imagine, taken place so marvellous a transformation—(Cheers)—and yet when in your name, and in the name of the Queen of England, I bade these people welcome to their new homes, it was not the improvement in their material fortunes that preoccupied my thoughts. Glad as I was to have the power of applotting them so ample a portion of our teeming soil—a soil which seems to blossom at a touch—(Cheering)—and which they were cultivating to such manifest advantage, I felt infinitely prouder in being able to throw over them theegis of the British Constitution—(Loud cheering)—and in bidding them freely share with us our unrivalled political institutions, our untrammelled personal liberty. (Great cheering.) We ourselves are so accustomed to breathe the atmosphere of freedom that it scarcely occurs to us to consider and appreciate our advantages in this respect. It is only when we are reminded by such incidents as that to which I refer, of the small extent of the world's surface over which the principles of Parliamentary Government can be said to work smoothly and harmoniously, that we are led to consider the exceptional happiness of our position. (Applause.) Nor was my visit to the Icelandic community less satisfactory than that to our Menonrite fellow subjects. From accidental circumstances I have

These precautions should be taken without fail, and where the disease has already attacked one member of the family, daily inspection should be made of the throats of all the other members. During the prevalence of diphtheria suspicion should always be excited when a child complains of a sore throat, or when, without any complaint it is languid, feverish, and has a discharge from its nostrils.

Her Majesty has been acutely sensitive to the cruelties of the war and sent instructions to the proper officials to the effect that all the official information received from the headquarters of both armies, and from the Embassies and Consulates, touching the matter in question, should be summarized and forwarded to her without delay. A telegraph wire, connecting Her Majesty's private rooms in the Castle where she is now residing (Balmoral) and the offices of the Ministry in Pall Mall is used to transmit all important intelligence. Less interesting despatches are forwarded from London to Balmoral by special messengers. The Queen, wherever she goes, has her own telegraphic operators, who are as regularly part of the establishments she in turn occupies as the housekeepers, chamberlains and other indispensable officers. One of these gentlemen, with whom I have had the honor of a personal acquaintance for many years, says Her Majesty is one of the hardest workers he ever had any experience of. I violate no confidence, but merely state a well-known fact, when I say the Queen has been known to keep Ministers and heads of departments at work a great part of the night informing her by telegraph of the progress of debates, acquainting her with the contents of despatches, and so forth. Her Majesty has frequently been known to rise at daylight, day after day, go through the whole of the business received during the night, dictating replies, signing letters, despatches and official documents, and completing everything before breakfast. This is the woman that so-called gentlemen, who have scribbled anonymously for some of our American papers, have described as "a gin-drinking Mrs. Jones."

Russian Soldiers and Tea.

The Russian soldiers are said to live and fight almost wholly upon tea. The Cossacks often carry it about in the shape of bricks, or rather tiles, which, before hardening, are soaked in sheep's blood and boiled in milk, with the addition of flour, butter, and salt, so as to constitute a kind of soup. The passion of the Russian for this beverage is simply astonishing. In the depth of winter he will empty twenty cups in succession, at nearly boiling point, until he perspires at every pore, and then in a state of intense excitement fraught with promise of a successful future than the Mennonite Settlement. (Applause.) When I visited these interesting people they had only been two years in the Province, and yet in a long ride I took across many miles of prairie, which but yesterday was absolutely bare, desolate, and untenanted, the home of the wolf, the badger, and the eagle, I passed village after village, homestead after homestead, furnished forth with all the conveniences and incidents of European comfort, and a scientific agriculture, while on either side the road, corn fields already ripe for harvest, and pastures populous with herds of cattle stretched away to horizon. (Great applause.) Even on this continent—the peculiar theatre of rapid change and progress—there has nowhere, I imagine, taken place so marvellous a transformation.—(Cheers) —and yet when in your name, and in the name of the Queen of England, I bade these people welcome to their new homes, it was not the improvement in their material fortunes that preoccupied my thoughts. Glad as I was to have the power of applotting them so ample a portion of our teeming soil—a soil which seems to blossom at a touch.—(Cheering) —and which they were cultivating to such manifest advantage, I felt infinitely prouder in being able to throw over them theegis of the British Constitution—(Loud cheering)—and in bidding them freely share with us our unrivalled political institutions, our untrammelled personal liberty. (Great cheering.) We ourselves are so accustomed to breathe the atmosphere of freedom that it scarcely occurs to us to consider and appreciate our advantages in this respect. It is only when we are reminded by such incidents as that to which I refer, of the small extent of the world's surface over which the principles of Parliamentary Government can be said to work smoothly and harmoniously, that we are led to consider the exceptional happiness of our position. (Applause.) Nor was my visit to the Icelandic community less satisfactory than that to our Mennonite fellow subjects. From accidental circumstances I have been long since led to take an interest in the history and literature of the Scandinavian race, and the kindness I once received at the hands of the Icelandic people in their own island naturally induced me to take a deep interest in the welfare of this new emigration. (Applause.) When we take into account the secluded position of the Icelandic nation for the last thousand years, the unfavourable conditions of their climatic and geographical situation, it would be unreasonable to expect that a colony from thence should exhibit the same aptitudes for agricultural enterprise and settlement, as would be possessed by a people fresh from intimate contact with the higher civilization of Europe. In Iceland there are neither trees, nor corn fields, nor highways. You cannot, therefore, expect an Icelander to exhibit an inspired proficiency in felling timber, ploughing land, or making roads, yet unfortunately these are the three accomplishments most necessary to a colonist in Canada. But though starting at a disadvantage in these respects, you must not underrate the capacity of your new fellow countrymen. They are endowed with a great deal of intellectual ability and a quick intelligence. They are well educated. I scarcely entefed a hotel at Ginnli which did not possess a library. They are well conducted, religious, and peaceable. Above all they are docile and anxious to learn. (Applause.) Nor considering the difficulty which prevails in this country in procuring women servants, will the accession of some hundreds of bright, good-humoured, though perhaps inexperienced, yet willing Icelandic girls, anxious for employment, be found a disadvantage by the resident ladies of the country. Should the dispersion of these young people lead in course of time to the formation of more intimate and tender ties than those of mere neighborhood between the Canadian population and the Icelandic colony, I am sure in predicting that it will not prove a matter of regret on the one side or the other. (Applause.) And gentlemen, in reference to this point I cannot help remarking with satisfaction on the extent to which a community of interests, the sense is a most terrible affair, Sir," old Ambliss, who was a feeble, unattractive bank clerk. "We have you, Sir, and the doctor, as best we could do. But perhaps I'd like to go into her room at

I should, as a matter of course, led me to her room. There it was, and they brought more at everything was plainly visible. She had not liked, or had been disturbed anything, so the room was the same state as when they had it. It appeared they had not been in the morning, for this was common with her; but when the night and evening passed away and not appear, and no answer was to their rapping at her door, the alarm, and at last forced an entrance, they found the furniture in a state of confusion, as though a struggle had taken place. Miss Parkway in her dress was lying on her face quite dead. I lifted her on to the bed, and marks on her throat had judged from strangulation. As I did no good to her, I noticed as I was able the appearance of her face, and especially looked for signs of cloth torn from an assault, which often remain in a struggle, or a dropped weapon, but I could see nothing.

There was no difficulty in finding how the assassin had entered the room and how he had left it. A door at the end of the room was open on the ground floor, and a chair of one of the windows thrown up, although the blind was fully down. The furniture was asked over and upset; the wash-basin was a large and somewhat ornate, of a clumsy and old-fashioned pattern, had been everthrown, and I fell into the fire-place, where it was resting on the bars in a very curious manner; while the jug had fallen on the grate, deluging the fire-place with water, but, extraordinary to relate, being broken to pieces, at any rate, though badly cracked. A great noise had probably been made, as of help probably uttered; but I saw his wife were both deaf, and the servant all slept at the big house in the front, while Miss Parkway slept at the bottom back, and in a room which was on the house itself.

I had time to hear and notice all for the doctor came, and his advice was, of course a mere matter of life and death. No one could help or harm the man now; with the information I had, I went to the house of the magistrate, a very active gentleman. I ought to have noted that the drawers in which Parkway kept her money and were forced open and every thing abstracted, the only trace of being a few links of a slight chain of unusual pattern, which, with one stone, the lady generally used to hang round her neck. This chain had been broken by violence, and its links scattered about; the stone

The furniture of the room, in all cases where it is possible, should be such as to admit of cleaning, and all extra articles, such as window drapery, woollen carpets, and others of a similar nature, should be removed from the room during the sickness. This is necessary on account of the liability of these articles to retain the contagion of the disease. After recovery it is always well to dry-rub the walls of the room with cloths, which should be immediately burned, and the floor washed with soap and water, to which carbolic acid may be added in the proportion of one pint to three or four gallons. All clothing after death should be thoroughly boiled, or still better, burned.

As there is every reason to believe that in every city many contagious diseases are widely spread by means of the schools, no child should be allowed to attend school when diphtheria exists in the family, nor when it has itself any symptoms, no matter how slight, which would arouse suspicion, nor when it is convalescent from the disease, until the attending physician deems it perfectly safe for it so to do.

During sickness the discharge from the throat and nose should not be allowed to remain in the room. If collected in a vessel they should be disinfected by carbolic acid, chloride of zinc, &c., and then effectually removed. These disinfectants should be used somewhat freely in the sick room. All cloths or rags used about the patient should be immediately burned. Such articles as towels, handkerchiefs, &c., which can not be destroyed, should not be used in connection with the patient. All clothes and bedding used by the patient should be, upon removal, boiled for an hour or more in a weak solution of chloride of lime. All such clothing should be washed by themselves. It would also be well for those in attendance upon the patient to wash their hands in a weak solution of carbolic acid.

German Wives.

The culinary art forms a part of the education of the women in Germany. The well-to-do tradesmen like the mechanic, takes pride in seeing his daughters good house-keepers. To effect this object the girl, on leaving school, which she does when about fourteen years of age, goes through the ceremony of confirmation, and then is placed by her parents with a country gentleman, or in a large family, where she remains one or two years, filling what may also be termed the post of servant, or doing the work of one. This is looked upon as an apprenticeship to domestic economy. She differs from a servant, however, in this—she receives no wages; on the contrary, her parents pay for care taken of her, as well as her clothing. This is the first step in her education as house-keeper. She next passes, on the same conditions, into the kitchen of a rich private family, or into that of a hotel of good repute. Here she has control of the expenditures of the servants employed in it, and assists personally in the cooking, but is always addressed as Miss, and is treated by the family with deference and consideration. Many daughters of rich families receive similar training, with this difference, however, that they receive it in a princely mansion or a royal residence. There is a reigning queen in Germany at the present time who was trained in this way. Consequently the women in Germany are perfect models of economy.

A couple were married in Goderich, Ont., last week—the bridegroom being 77 and the bride 58. Both looked fresh.

The passion of the Russian for this beverage is simply astonishing. In the depth of winter he will empty twenty cups in succession, at nearly boiling point, until he perspires at every pore, and then in a state of intense excitement rush out, roll in the snow, get up, and go on to the next similar place of entertainment. So with the army. With every group or circle of tents travels the inevitable tea cauldron, suspended from a tripod; and it would be vain to think of computing how many times each soldier's pannikin is filled upon a halt. It is his first idea. Frequently he carries it cold, in a copper case, as a solace upon the march.

How he Married.

A clergyman, a widower, recently created quite a sensation in his household which consisted of seven grown-up daughters. The reverend gentleman was absent from home for a number of days, visiting in an adjoining county. The daughters received a letter from her father, stating that he "had married a widow with six sprightly children," and that he might be expected home at a certain time. The effect of that news was a shock to the happy family. The girls, noted for their meekness and amiable temperaments, seemed another set of beings, there was weeping and wailing and tearing of hair, and all manner of naughty things said. The tidy home was neglected, and when the day of arrival came, the house was anything but inviting. At last the Rev. Mr. X— came, but he was alone. He greeted his daughters as usual, and as he viewed the neglected apartments, there was a merry twinkle in his eye. The daughters were nervous and evidently anxious. At last the eldest daughter mustered courage.

"Where is our mother?"

"In heaven," said the good man.

"But where is the widow with six children whom you wrote you had married?"

"Why, I married her to another man, my dears," he replied, delighted at the success of his joke.—Detroit Post.

(Applause.) And, gentlemen, in reference to this point I cannot help remarking with satisfaction on the extent to which a community of interests, the sense of being engaged in a common undertaking, the obvious degree in which the prosperity of any one man is a gain to his neighbours, has amalgamated the various sections of the population of this Province, originally so diverse in race, origin, and religion, into a patriotic, closely welded, and united whole. (Applause.) In no part of Canada have I found a better feeling prevailing between all classes and sections of the community. (Cheers.)

It is in a great measure owing to this widespread sentiment of brotherhood, that on a recent occasion great troubles have been averted, while at the present moment it is finding its crowning and most triumphant expression in the establishment of a University under conditions which have been found impossible of application in any other Province of Canada—I may say in any other country in the world—(great cheering)—for nowhere else either in Europe or on this Continent, as far as I am aware, have the Bishops and heads of the various religious communities into which the Christian world is unhappily divided, combined to erect an Alma Mater to which all the denominational colleges of the Province are to be affiliated, and whose statutes and degrees are to be regulated and dispensed under the joint auspices of a governing body in which all the Churches of the land will be represented. (Great applause.) An achievement of this kind speaks volumes in favour of the wisdom, liberality, and the Christian charity of these devoted men by whom in this distant land the consciences of the population are led and enlightened, and long may they be spared to see the effects of their exertions and magnanimous sacrifices in the good conduct and grateful devotion of their respective flocks. (Cheers.) Nor, I am happy to think, is this good fellowship upon which I have so much cause to congratulate you, confined either within the limits of the Province, or even within those of the Dominion.

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S MEETING AT ODESSA.

PURSUANT to the notice given, the Hon. the Minister of Finance met his constituents at Odessa on Tuesday evening, 30th ult., and was received by his friends with a warm welcome. SIDNEY WARNER, Esq., of Wilton, filled the chair with his usual ability, and after a short but appropriate expression of his gratification with the members present, and at meeting the Hon. Gentleman, called on the Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT to address the assemblage.

MR. CARTWRIGHT, who was received with applause, said he regretted that he

The speeches delivered by the Reform leaders during the late campaign will be very shortly issued in pamphlet form for distribution throughout the country. The number printed will be very large. Making our Tory contemporaries a present of anything they can twist out of what we are going to say, we would suggest that the pamphlet be issued in parts, being more likely to be thoroughly read by and circulated among farmers, mechanics and the public generally when a dozen or two pages are stitched together than when four or five times as bulky. The speeches are by all odds the ablest ever delivered before the Canadian public, and in depth, breadth, and honesty, and comprehensiveness furnish a contrast with Tory utterances which will not be lost on the country.

POLITICAL CLIPS.

TORY PROGRAMME FOR '78.

Referring to the withdrawal of Sir John and his great travelling circus for the season, and his re-appearance with the yernal leaves of the spring of 1878. The following valedictory is given at the close of the opposition picnic season, by that talented orator and poet, Mr. Josiah Burr-Piomb:

This child of sin
Will rise again,
A startled world nonplussing,
And in the spring
His voice will ring
While wicked Grits discussing.

Sir John Macdonald told the Hamiltonians that Riel was a rebel. There was nothing particularly fresh in the information, but it was rather shabby to call the Frenchman names considering that he acted so friendly to Sir John when in 1872 he stepped aside in Provencher and allowed Sir George Cartier to take the seat.—Tiser.

That high-toned organ of genteel journalism, that gentlemen's paper written for gentlemen, the Halifax Herald, is polite enough to assure us that the Minister of Finance has the "intellect of a jail-bird." It is these little amenities and courtesies of Tory journalism that soften down the asperities of political life, and make us thankful that the holy fire of chivalry still burns within the Tory bosom.—Tiser.

The Kingston News says: "In 1873 what is known as the Pacific Railway Scandal turned up, the result of the united conspiracies of a band of thieves." We presume the band reserved to by our contemporary were Macdonald, Cartier, Allan & Co., who according to the News, were guilty of the "grandest job ever perpetrated in the British Empire."

Mr. Cartwright has long enjoyed a considerable reputation as a Parliamentary speaker, and his late Budget Speeches were model financial statements—interesting, lucid, and displaying a thorough comprehension of a difficult subject; but even his intimate friends must have been agreeably surprised at his splendid efforts on the stump. The talk about his "incapacity" and "bungling" is silenced forever, for his discussions of the financial and commercial affairs of the country have discovered a mind of a very high order, which seizes its subject with a statesmanlike grasp. Our Protectionist friends dispute the soundness of his policy, as they are entitled to do, but they cannot dispute the ability with which he propounds it. Sir John Macdonald fancies himself a wonderfully clever fellow at satirizing and scandalizing an opponent, and he has paid a good deal of attention in that line to the Finance Minister; but we venture to think he will not lightly tackle that gentleman again, for Mr. Cartwright has shown himself a professor of the art of disputation, and has administered to Sir John the worst flog-

PLEVNA SURROUNDED BY RUSSIANS.

No convoy has succeeded in entering Plevna since Gen. Ghourko took command of the cavalry. The investment is now complete. The Imperial Guards, as fast as they arrived, took up positions on the Russian left; thus gradually prolonging the line of investment across the Lovatz road to the Sofia road.

The investment by the infantry thus extends from the Roumanian positions, north-east of Plevna, to the Sofia road on the west. The circle is completed by Gourkha's cavalry, which can cut off all supplies, but the Russians are every day receiving reinforcements, and there is every appearance that they intend to surround Plevna by a series of works as the Germans did Paris. The Russians will soon have troops enough to complete the infantry investment. There is every reason to believe Plevna is not victualled sufficiently to stand a siege until the spring, and appearances are that Osman Pasha will attempt, probably unsuccessfully, to fight his way out. The question of a second campaign is resolutely faced, and the prospect looks more hopeful for the Russians than since Krundener's defeat in July.

The impression prevails that since the recent rains the Russians convinced of the impossibility of wintering in Bulgaria will make a desperate effort to effect a reduction of Plevna and defeat Suleiman's army before their retirement into Roumania. Russia would thus stand in a better position should diplomacy intervene.

RUSSIAN VICTORIES.

A Russian official despatch from Tutchentiza, before Plevna, says, on the 24th, after a desperate engagement of ten hours, Gen. Gourko's detachment, with a portion of the Imperial Guard, captured a strong Turkish position between Gurnji Dubuik and Teliche. Gourko then stationed himself on the Sofia road, strengthening his position with new fortifications. This engagement also resulted in the capture of Achmet Ewsi Pasha with the chief of the staff, many other Turkish officers, 3,000 foot soldiers, and a regiment of cavalry. Four cannon, a quantity of rifles and ammunition, were also captured. Our loss is unknown, but must have been considerable.

On Sunday the Russians carried a Turkish position at Teliche, west of Plevna. A Pasha, several officers, seven companies of Turks, and three cannons were captured.

Grand Duke Nicholas inspected on the 26th the battlefield at Goray Dubrinsk. The troops are elated by their victory. The Russian loss was 2,500, and the Turkish loss nearly equal. Eighty Turkish officers were taken, and a flag and four guns captured.

The Turkish loss at the capture of the position near Gorny Dubnik, Oct. 24th, was 4,000 killed besides wounded and prisoners. The Russians only stormed the position. At the third attempt they assert the Turks twice lured them under a destructive fire with a white flag.

Teliche was surrounded on the 28th by one cavalry, two infantry brigades, and a brigade of Cossacks. It was bombarded for two hours from seventy-two guns and surrendered. There was no

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S MEETING AT ODESSA.

PURSUANT to the notice given, the Hon. the Minister of Finance met his constituents at Odessa on Tuesday evening, 30th ult., and was received by his friends with a warm welcome. SIDNEY WARNER, Esq., of Wilton, filled the chair with his usual ability, and after a short but appropriate expression of his gratification with the members present, and at meeting the Hon. Gentleman, called on the Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT to address the assemblage.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT, who was received with applause, said he regretted that he so seldom had found an opportunity to visit and address his constituents since he had taken the office which he now held. Nothing gave him more pleasure than to visit his constituents, and particularly those in Ernestown who had taken him by the hand when he was almost a stranger to them, and when he was a young and untried politician, and had given him a seat in the Parliament of Canada.

If therefore, he did not visit them so often as he could wish, he could assure them it was not from want of inclination to do so, but from the fact his time was so engrossed by the duties of his position, as to render such visits difficult in their accomplishment. He proposed on that evening to address them upon one of the topics which just now was agitating the public mind. He referred, he said, to the question of Protection and Free Trade, and he hoped to be able to convince them in the course of his remarks, that the Protection cry that had lately been made to do so much service in the recent utterances of a small number of persons, involved not only a fallacy, but covered an iniquity. It was not only absurd, but it was wrong and cruel. He then in an address of nearly two hours duration, discussed the topic in a lucid and plain commonsense manner, showing that Protection means increased taxation of the farmer, and that disguise it how its advocates will, it just means from an agriculturist's point of view, more taxation.

We hope next week to be able to give our readers, his entire speech on this Subject, and we bespeak for it a careful reading by our Farmers, as the class to whom it was delivered and for whose particular consideration it was originally intended.

The meeting was a gratifying success in all respects. Reporters were present from the "Whig" and "Standard" Offices. Messrs. PENSE of the "Whig" and CARY of the "Casket" were also present taking notes.

The Hon. Minister will certainly have to look elsewhere than in Odessa for indications of a Conservative reaction.

The Kingston News says: "In 1873 what is known as the Pacific Railway Scandal turned up, the result of the united conspiracies of a band of thieves." We presume the band resorted to by our contemporary were Macdonald, Cartier, Allan & Co., who according to the News, were guilty of the "grandest job ever perpetrated in the British Empire."

Mr. Cartwright has long enjoyed a considerable reputation as a Parliamentary speaker, and his late Budget Speeches were model financial statements—interesting, lucid, and displaying a thorough comprehension of a difficult subject; but even his intimate friends must have been agreeably surprised at his splendid efforts on the stump. The talk about his "incapacity" and "bungling" is silenced forever, for his discussions of the financial and commercial affairs of the country have discovered a mind of a very high order, which seizes its subject with a statesmanlike grasp. Our Protectionist friends dispute the soundness of his policy, as they are entitled to do, but they cannot dispute the ability with which he propounds it. Sir John Macdonald fancies himself a wonderfully clever fellow at satirizing and scandalizing an opponent, and he has paid a good deal of attention in that line to the Finance Minister; but we venture to think he will not lightly tackle that gentleman again, for Mr. Cartwright has shown himself a professor of the art of disputation, and has administered to Sir John the worst flogging that that worthy ever had his back warmed with during his long and boisterous career.—Tiscr.

To the Friends of Prohibition.

The Conference of Prohibitionists, held in Toronto September 18th and 19th, after fully considering the present position of the various prohibitory organizations in Canada, agreed to recommend a union of the previously existing Alliance with the several Provincial leagues, and the formation of a new Dominion Alliance. It was felt that more sympathy and support than have hitherto been given to the societies named could be secured for a general Prohibitory organization, and, consequently, more practical work performed.

The recommendations of the Conference having been accepted, the Alliance as now constituted is a thoroughly national society, with which Prohibitionists in all parts of the Dominion are invited to co-operate.

The Constitution of the new Alliance is framed to meet the circumstances arising out of the dissimilarity of laws in the several Provinces, and the vast extent of territory embraced in the sphere of its operations.

To the end that the work of the Alliance might be under the immediate direction and supervision of an Executive, whose members could readily consult with each other, it was deemed necessary that some city should be made the centre of operations, and Toronto was accordingly selected for the present year.

The Executive Committee intend, as soon as practicable, to enter upon a vigorous and systematic work in all parts of the Dominion, and whilst never losing sight of the great aim, "Total Prohibition," they will endeavor to promote Provincial or Dominion legislation in harmony with the objects and principles of the Alliance.

The first great duty devolving upon the Executive is to put the Alliance upon a sound financial basis, and to insure a regular income for a term of years, with that in view, they have concluded to appeal to the friends of prohibition for subscriptions to a fund of $100,000 payable in five equal annual instalments. This sum may appear large, but it is by no means out of proportion to the importance of the cause, the magnitude of the work, the number of persons that are expected to aid, or the strength and boasted liberality of our opponents. Those whom Providence has blessed with wealth, influence and a disposition to promote the

This engagement also resulted in the capture of Achmet Ewsi Pasha with the chief of the staff, many other Turkish officers, 3,000 foot soldiers, and a regiment of cavalry. PROVINCIAL PENITENTIARY.

The PRISONER said he had regretted the gross things charged him by Miss Carr, and that he had opportunity to have witnesses to him correct in his statement.

His LORDSHIP said that Miss Carr's evidence was given in a manner left no doubt as to her truthfulness; it had been corroborated at every point.

His LORDSHIP, in sentencing Louis to two years in the Provincial Penitentiary, said he could come to no other conclusion than that he knew of her father's trial, although her crime was not as heinous as his. She was, no doubt, measure controlled by him, but I do not forget that Miss Carr had in her, a woman, for mercy, and a woman's duty, had, to say the least, acted in a highly improper manner alluded to the fact that she controlled her father for good, but him great pain to say it, her co-esteeming the cab, and afterwards all the way to Hamilton on that night, was highly improper. I referred to the petitions, [signed by 2500 persons asking for a lenient sentence] and the fact that a family of children were dependent on motherly care, and said that all was with great pain he must do his duty. She had proven that she possessed of great strength of getting into the cab under the stances, in assisting to drug Miss Carr and in driving the carriage to H. He again expressed his opinion that he must have known her father's objection, sentenced her to two years in the Provincial Penitentiary.

When the prisoners spoke it was evident agitation, the female being very much distressed at the full position in which she found they were then removed to the whence they will shortly be taken to Kingston.

The Kingston "Whig" says: early morning express arrived Kingston on Wednesday from Guelph Sturdy and his daughter. At the great crowd, collected at the depot a glimpse of them, but at this point arrived at an early hour, and total prostration. The pair chatted and cheerily on the cars, and did not seem affected by the penalties inflicted upon for indiscretions and offences.

most a stranger to them, and when he was a young and untried politician, and had given him a seat in the Parliament of Canada.

If therefore, he did not visit them so often as he could wish, he could assure them it was not from want of inclination to do so, but from the fact his time was so engrossed by the duties of his position, as to render such visits difficult in their accomplishment. He proposed on that evening to address them upon one of the topics which just now was agitating the public mind. He referred, he said, to the question of Protection and Free Trade, and he hoped to be able to convince them in the course of his remarks, that the Protection cry that had lately been made to do so much service in the recent utterances of a small number of persons, involved not only a fallacy, but covered an iniquity. It was not only absurd, but it was wrong and cruel. He then in an address of nearly two hours duration, discussed the topic in a lucid and plain commonsense manner, showing that Protection means increased taxation of the farmer, and that disguise it how its advocates will, it just means from an agriculturist's point of view, more taxation.

We hope next week to be able to give our readers, his entire speech on this subject, and we bespeak for it a careful reading by our Farmers, as the class to whom it was delivered and for whose particular consideration it was originally intended.

The meeting was a gratifying success in all respects. Reporters were present from the "Whig" and "Standard" Offices. Messrs. Penne of the "Whig" and Casey of the "Casket" were also present taking notes.

The Hon. Minister will certainly have to look elsewhere than in Odessa for indications of a Conservative reaction.

"BUSINESS."

A Standard correspondent, calling himself "Business," finds fault with the publication of liquor imports in the EXPRESS. Now, if Mr. "Business" was a business man, as he would have people believe from his signature, he would know that almost every newspaper in the Dominion publishes the imports and exports regularly—whiskey included.

The Standard editor's comparison of the matter, with the privacy of post office letters, amounts to nothing, and the assertion that the Express publishes these items to show its opposition to the Dunkin Act is simply ridiculous.

The Toronto Mail has taken a step in the right direction, and one which would be advisable with daily journals generally throughout the Dominion. The following is from its issue of Monday:

"It will be seen by reference to our advertising columns that we shall during the coming winter, try to meet the wants of the working-classes, to many of whom are now unhelpfully out of employment, by giving gratuitous insertion to all advertisements for situations. And that the unemployed may more fully reap the benefit of this change, employers will also have the privilege of gratuitously notifying the public of vacancies in their service. No advertisement to exceed twenty words, or to be inserted more than twice."

sition of the various prohibitory organizations in Canada, agreed to recommend a union of the previously existing Alliance with the several Provincial leagues, and the formation of a new Dominion Alliance. It was felt that more sympathy and support than have hitherto been given to the societies named could be secured for a general Prohibitory organization, and, consequently, more practical work performed.

The recommendations of the Conference having been accepted, the Alliance as now constituted is a thoroughly national society, with which Prohibitionists in all parts of the Dominion are invited to co-operate.

The Constitution of the new Alliance is framed to meet the circumstances arising out of the dissimilarity of laws in the several Provinces, and the vast extent of territory embraced in the sphere of its operations.

To the end that the work of the Alliance might be under the immediate direction and supervision of an Executive, whose members could readily consult with each other, it was deemed necessary that some city should be made the centre of operations, and Toronto was accordingly selected for the present year.

The Executive Committee intend, as soon as practicable, to enter upon a vigorous and systematic work in all parts of the Dominion, and whilst never losing sight of the great aim, "Total Prohibition," they will endeavor to promote Provincial or Dominion legislation in harmony with the objects and principles of the Alliance.

The first great duty devolving upon the Executive is to put the Alliance upon a sound financial basis, and to insure a regular income for a term of years, with that end in view, they have concluded to appeal to the friends of prohibition for subscriptions to a fund of $100,000 payable in five equal annual instalments. This sum may appear large, but it is by no means out of proportion to the importance of the cause, the magnitude of the work, the number of persons that are expected to aid, or the strength and boasted liberality of our opponents. Those whom Providence has blessed with wealth, influence and a disposition to promote the best interests of society will, doubtless, contribute liberally to this scheme; but its success cannot be secured without the cordial assistance of all classes according to their means. We also trust that all temperance associations throughout the Dominion will lend their hearty co-operation to ensure the success of this undertaking.

To indicate the practicability of raising the sum named, let it be supposed that:

10 persons give each $100 for 5 years	$ 5,000
20 " " " " " "	10,000
30 " " " " " "	15,000

90 " " " " " "	45,000
100 " " " " " "	50,000
Total	$100,000

and this appeal meet with the response anticipated, there will be no difficulty in educating and directing public opinion as to secure, at no distant date, the enactment of a Prohibitory Law, and the consequent deliverance of our fair Dominion from the terrible evils resulting from the Liquor traffic.

THOMAS GILES, Secretary.

PLEVNA SURROUNDED BY RUSSIANS.

No convoy has succeeded in entering Plevna since Gen. Ghourko took command of the cavalry. The investment is now complete. The Imperial Guards, as fast as they arrived, took up positions on the Russian left; thus gradually prolonging the line of investment across the Lovatz road to the Sofia road.

The investment by the infantry thus extends from the Roumanian positions, north-east of Plevna, to the Sofia road on the west. The circle is completed by Gourko's cavalry, which can cut off all supplies, but the Russians are every day receiving reinforcements, and there is every appearance that they intend to surround Plevna by a series of works as the Germans did Paris. The Russians will soon have troops enough to complete the infantry investment: There is every reason to believe Plevna is not victualled sufficiently to stand a siege until the spring, and appearances are that Osman Pasha will attempt, probably unsuccessfully, to fight his way out. The question of a second campaign is resolutely faced, and the prospect looks more hopeful for the Russians than since Krudener's defeat in July.

The impression prevails that since the recent rains the Russians convinced of the impossibility of wintering in Bulgaria will make a desperate effort to effect a reduction of Plevna and defeat Suleiman's army before their retirement into Roumania. Russia would thus stand in a better position should diplomacy intervene.

RUSSIAN VICTORIES.

A Russian official despatch from Tutchentza, before Plevna, says, on the 24th, after a desperate engagement of ten hours, Gen. Gourko's detachment, with a portion of the Imperial Guard, captured a strong Turkish position between Gurnji Dubuik and Teliche. Gourko then stationed himself on the Sofia road, strengthening his position with new fortifications. This engagement also resulted in the capture of Achmet Ewsi Pasha with the chief of the staff, many other Turkish officers, 3,000 foot soldiers, and a regiment of cavalry. Four cannon, a quantity of rifles and ammunition, were also captured. Our loss is unknown, but must have been considerable.

On Sunday the Russians carried a Turkish position at Teliche, west of Plevna. A Pasha, several officers, seven companies of Turks, and three cannons were captured.

Grand Duke Nicholas inspected on the 25th the battlefield at Gorny Dubrinsk. The troops are elated by their victory. The Russian loss was 2,500, and the Turkish loss nearly equal. Eighty Turkish officers were taken, and a flag and four guns captured.

The Turkish loss at the capture of the position near Gorny Dubink, Oct. 24th, was 4,000 killed besides wounded and prisoners. The Russians only stormed the position. At the third attempt they assert the Turks twice lured them under a destructive fire with a white flag.

THE RED CROSS.

The Turkish Minister, at New York, explains that the societies of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent are identical in object, viz., to relieve the suffering in time of war, and in view of the Russians learning of the American society of the Red Cross recently formed here he claims that Turkey is one of the countries in the world where religious liberty is most extensively practiced.

THE STURDY-CARR ABDUCTION.

FREDERICK STURDY SENTENCED TO TEN, AND LOUISA TO TWO YEARS IN THE PENITENTIARY.

GUELPH, Oct. 29.—This afternoon his Lordship Mr. Justice Merriam sentenced the prisoners Frederick and Louisa Sturdy, for having abducted and aided and abetted in the abduction of the niece of Mr. Sheriff Gow, Miss Annie Mary Carr, on the night of the 26 July.

His Lordship addressed the prisoner, and said he entirely concurred in the verdict rendered by the jury. In your case the limit the law allows as punishment for the offence is fourteen years in the Provincial Penitentiary. He said he saw no mitigating circumstance in his case. He had ample opportunity to reflect after getting Miss Carr into the cab and during the journey to Hamilton. It was a deliberately planned abduction of the young woman, and had been carried out in the most cruel, heartless, and brutal manner. Notwithstanding her entreaties for mercy, she was carried to Hamilton on that wretched night, and although he did not wish to harass the prisoner's feelings he must refer to the deliberate violation of her person, with a view of compelling her to go through a marriage ceremony as a means to cover the principal portion of crime. This was the first case of this nature which had occurred in Ontario, and he felt it to be his duty to society, to morality, and to the public to punish him, as well as make an example to others. It was extremely deplorable to see a person like the prisoner in his shameful position, and although counsel had urged uncontrollable passion and affection as a motive for the crime, he had had, as he said, ample opportunity to desist before the crime was complete. The sentence of the Court, therefore, is that you be confined for ten years in the Provincial Penitentiary.

The PRISONER said he had not been guilty of the gross things charged against him by Miss Carr, and that he had no opportunity to have witnesses to prove him correct in his statement.

His LORDSHIP said that Miss Carr's evidence was given in a manner which left no doubt as to her truthfulness, and it had been corroborated at every important point.

His Lordship, in sentencing Louisa Sturdy to two years in the Provincial Penitentiary, he could come to no other conclusion than that she knew of her father's intention, although her crime was not so enormous as his. She was, no doubt, in a measure controlled by him, but he could not forget that Miss Carr had intreated her, a woman, for mercy, and that instead of protecting her, and as was a woman's duty, had, to say the least of it, acted in a highly improper manner. He alluded to the fact that she might have controlled her father for good, but it gave him great pain to say it, her conduct in entering the cab, and afterwards driving all the way to Hamilton on that wretched night, was highly improper. He referred to the petitions, signed by 812 citizens asking for a lenient sentence on the girl, and the fact that a family of small children were dependent on her for motherly care, and said that although it was with great pain he must perform his duty. She had proven that she was

THE KAMINISTIGUIA.

THE PRACTICABILITY AS A HARBOR EFFECTUALLY ESTABLISHED.

SOUTHAMPTON, ONT., October 27.

The steamer Ontario and Quebec both went up the Kaministiquia river, drawing over 11 feet aft, touching lightly opposite the Fort. The steamer City of Duluth, the largest vessel on Lake Superior, went up on Monday and discharged forty tons of freight at the Government dock. The captain went up to Ingalls dock, a quarter of a mile further up, with no difficulty at all. She had no trouble in winding, and drew ten feet eight inches aft. The captain considers the Kaministiquia the best river on Lake Superior. He expressed himself highly pleased, and glad he took his vessel up, as it settles a vexed question. Only one snag was met with in the river up to Ingalls's dock to the west. The depth of water in the channel outside of the river, eleven feet on the average, is nearly fourteen feet; being on board myself I know it from personal observation, having taken the sounding from the man who hove the lead,

The Inverary Castle Fire.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

The famous family seat of the Duke of Argyll at Inverary was severely damaged by a fire which broke out on the 12th ult. The Princess Louise and her husband, Lord Lorne, as well as the Duke and Duchess of Argyll and other members of the family, were sleeping in the house at the time. As usual in a nobleman's home, the means to subdue a fire when once it has broken out were ineffective, and for a long time the water supply was miserably insufficient. Headed by the Duke and Lord Lorne everybody worked with a will at passing the buckets filled at a neighboring stream, and soon all the tenantry and townspeople were on the spot to help. The accounts differ as to how the fire was first discovered. According to one report, a fisherman going to the harbour saw the flames burst out of the top of the great central tower, and at once gave an alarm, and in a very short time all the members of the family, including the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise, who were in the castle at the time of the outbreak, and had to take refuge in the Argyll Hotel. By this time a large number of the townspeople had arrived in the park, and with the servants were busily at work in removing the more valuable effects and extinguishing the flames. Owing to the fact that the main walls, galleries, and staircases were stone, the conflagration was limited to one part of the building, and some of the principal rooms were saved by the solid character of the masonry and by a copious application of water. The billiard room, and several bed rooms had their contents quite destroyed. Many thousands of pounds will have to be expended in restoring the interior of this noble mansion. The pictures and other valuables were removed in safety. Among the pictures is a portrait of the great Marquis of Argyll and his son, who were both beheaded, and many other family portraits. The Queen was early apprised by telegram of the safety of the Princess and the other members of the Argyll family. The fire was visible for ten miles. The cause of the conflagration is unknown. The castle remained on fire from 4 a. m. till 9 a. m. The building is about 140 years old, and is constructed of chlorite slate. Many articles of vertu and antiquities have been destroyed. A fine organ that stood in the north gallery has been reduced to ashes, together with 200 flint-lock muskets that had been used at Culloden by the Argyllshire Fencibles, and which had been artistically mounted above the wall.

SITTING BULL ON THE STUMP.

THE BIG INJUN GIVES UNCLE SAM A TIDING OF HIS MIND—HE APPRECIATES SQUA DEALING—THE CANADIAN BLACKFEET TREATY.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—A Herald's special gives further details of the Sitting Bull Conference. It says that Sitting Bull in replying to Gen. Terry, said: "For sixty-four years you have kept me and my people and treated me badly. What have we done that you should war us? I did not give you the country, but you followed me, so I had to come to this country. I was born and raised in this country with Red River half-breed and we are going to that part of the country. You came here to tell us lies but we don't want to hear them. I do wish any such language used to me that is to tell me such lies in my great Mother's house. (Alluding to Queen Victoria.) Don't you say two words more. Go back home where you came from. This country is mine, and I intend to stay here and raise this country full grown people." The "how-hows" the Indians interrupting this address showed the perfect sympathy between them and Sitting Bull. Several other Sioux spoke all more or less after Sitting Bull's style. A squaw also spoke, probably as a direct insult to the Commission as the office of squaw is degrading. Ter and Lawrence exhibited little concern during the proceedings, and the Indians rather chagrined, were about to leave when Terry asked if they refused to accept the President's offers. A long pause ensued and Sitting Bull finally replied that he had told all he had to tell. "In this case," said Gen. Terry, "there is nothing more." This decision disconcerted the Redskins. Sitting Bull completed his insult by rising at the end of the conference, shaking hands with the Dominion officers, and addressing to them terms of affection and respect, while he slighted the Americans present, not even saying to the Indian "Haw," or good-bye.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—A Herald's Pembina despatch says by a Canadian Blackfoot treaty the Indians cede about 200,000 square miles of the finest land in the Canadian North-West to the Dominion. Each band is allotted a separate reservation. Each chief gets $25 cash, a coat, and a silver medal. The annual payment to each chief is $25, each head man $15, and to all the others of the tribe $5.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—The official report of the Sitting Bull Commission states that after the conference, the Canadian authorities conferred with Sitting Bull, and, in answer to the request of the Commission as to what transpire Col. McLeod addressed them, stating endeavored to impress on the Indians the importance of their answer. I contradicted their assertion that they were British Indians, and pointed out their only hope was the buffalo, and would not be long before this support would cease. They could expect nothing besides protection from the Queen Government while they behaved themselves. He warned them their decisions affected them and their children. I told them they must not cross the line with hostile intent, and urged them to carry his words to the camp and to their young men. He also pointed out that a few indiscreet young warriors might involve them seriously. They unanimously adhere to their answer, and promised to observe what he told the Col. McLeod thinks they will not cross the line, at any rate not for some time come.

On Sunday the Russians carried a Turkish position at Teliche, west of Plevna. A Pasha, several officers, seven companies of Turks, and three cannons were captured.

Grand Duke Nicholas inspected on the 25th the battlefield at Goray Dubinsk. The troops are elated by their victory. The Russian loss was 2,500, and the Turkish loss nearly equal. Eighty Turkish officers were taken, and a flag and four guns captured.

The Turkish loss at the capture of the position near Gorny Dubinsk, Oct. 24th, was 4,000 killed besides wounded and prisoners. The Russians only stormed the position. At the third attempt they assert the Turks twice lured them under a destructive fire with a white flag.

Teliche was surrounded on the 28th by one cavalry, two infantry brigades, and a brigade of Cossacks. It was bombarded for two hours from seventy-two guns and surrendered. There was no assault.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION.

The Russian losses to October 18th are officially stated at 60,100.

A despatch from Gurgevo says the bombardment of Rustchuk continues.

Kars has been bombarded, and part of the city is now on fire. It is now completely invested. The place is provisioned for four months.

The Hungarian Government refuse to surrender the rails captured on the way through Hungary to Roumania, on the ground that they were contraband of war.

Order has been restored in the southern portion of the Province of Daghestan. The insurrection is very troublesome in the north, but its importance has been exaggerated, and its success impossible.

RUSSIANS DETERMINED TO CONTINUE THE WAR.

It is asserted Prince Gorischakoff, in a communication to the Russian Ambassador at Berlin emphasized the determination of the Czar to continue the war until the eradication of the Christians of Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria is definitely improved.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—It is reported Earl Derby has ordered the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg to confer with Prince Gortschakoff with a view of bringing about mediation.

PARIS, Oct. 25.—The Servian Skupatchina will not meet before December. The question of peace cannot sooner be decided.

THE TURKISH POSITION.

It is officially confirmed that Ismail Pasha, with a force of forty battalions, effected a junction with Mukhtar Pasha. The army is now concentrated in a strong position at Kaprikoi.

The Egyptians, before their removal to Varna, suffered dreadfully, 800 or 400 going into the hospital daily with dysentery.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—Turkey having secured a release of £280,000 of Egyptian annual tribute, heretofore pledged to pay interest on Turkish loans is about to open negotiations here for a new loan of £5,000,000; interest to be secured by the pledge of the beforementioned £280,000.

he could come to no other conclusion than that she knew of her father's intention, although her crime was not so enormous as his. She was, no doubt, in a measure controlled by him, but he could not forget that Miss Carr had intreated her, a woman, for mercy, and that instead of protecting her, and as was a woman's duty, had, to say the least of it, acted in a highly improper manner. He alluded to the fact that she might have controlled her father for good, but it gave him great pain to say it, her conduct in entering the cab, and afterwards driving all the way to Hamilton on that wretched night, was highly improper. He referred to the petitions, signed by 812 citizens asking for a lenient sentence on the girl and the fact that a family of small children were dependent on her for motherly care, and said that although it was with great pain he must perform his duty. She had proven that she was possessed of great strength of mind, in getting into the cab under the circumstances, in assisting to drug Miss Carr, and in driving the carriage to Hamilton. He again expressed his opinion that she must have known her father's object, and sentenced her to two years in the Provincial Penitentiary.

When the prisoners spoke it was with evident agitation, the female prisoner being very much distressed at the painful position in which she found herself. They were then removed to their cells, whence they will shortly be taken to Kingston.

The Kingston "Whig" says—The early morning express arrived in Kingston on Wednesday from Guelph, with Sturdy and his daughter. At Toronto a great crowd, collected at the depot to catch a glimpse of them, but at this place they arrived at an early hour, and totally unexpected. The pair chatted and laughed cheerily on the cars, and did not seem much affected by the penalties inflicted upon them for indiscretions and offences.

Osman Pasha a Canadian

The Scotch are not content with proving that Adam was a countryman, and the Americans are not content with having the "greatest country in the world," which produce the "greatest man" who ever lived, and who was first in war and first in peace, but they must needs go out of their way to rob Canada of its modest share of honors. We have been treated to no end of convincing proof that Osman Pasha is a Scotchman, and to a like quantity of equally convincing proof that that redoubtable warrior was an officer who fought in the American war. This is grossly unjust to Canada, for every intelligent being knows perfectly well that Osman is neither a Caledonian nor an American cit, but a naturalized subject of Canada. It is true he was borne in the U. S., but to Canada, the land of his adoption, are to be credited his name and fame. Osman's real name is Anson Green Phelps Dodge; who was M. P. for North York during 72-73, and who was last seen in our House of Commons, whither he repaired from North York, in November, '73, to vote for the Pacific Scandal hero. He was not afterwards heard of for a couple of years, when it was discovered by a Canadian traveller in Turkey that, overwhelmed with grief at Sir John's defeat, he had entered the Turkish army in order to get distraction from his despondent woes. He was promoted rapidly owing to the Sultan having learned that he silenced Canon Ramsay in Canada and was prepared to laugh at the Russian big guns. As soon as he takes St. Petersburg, it is said to be his intention of returning to North York where he will again run a saw mill. This is the true story of Osman Pasha.—London Advertiser.

THE CASTLETON TRAGEDY.

SMITH, WELTON, AND MALLORY AT THE COBOURG ASSIZES.

DAVID SMITH THE ABORTIONIST FOUND GUILTY OF MURDER—SENTENCE DEFERRED.

COBOURG, Oct. 25.—The trial of the three men, David Smith, Marvin Welton,

several bed rooms had their contents quite destroyed. Many thousands of pounds will have to be expended in restoring the interior of this noble mansion. The pictures and other valuables were removed in safety. Among the pictures is a portrait of the great Marquis of Argyle and his son, who were both beheaded, and many other family portraits. The Queen was early apprised by telegram of the safety of the Princess and the other members of the Argyle family. The fire was visible for ten miles. The cause of the conflagration is unknown. The castle remained on fire from 4 a. m. till 9 a. m. The building is about 140 years old, and is constructed of chlorite slate. Many articles of vertu and antiquities have been destroyed. A fine organ that stood in the north gallery has been reduced to ashes, together with 200 flintlock muskets that had been used at Culloden by the Argyleshire Fencibles, and which had been artistically arranged along the wall. The colours of the 91st (Princess Louise's Own) Highlanders, which were, some years ago, handed over to the Duke of Argyle's custody, are also destroyed. The townspeople were most active in their exertions, and as soon as the worst was over the Duke and Duchess called upon several of the most prominent inhabitants of the town and personally thanked them for their aid. They afterwards addressed a letter to the Provost, thanking "all the people of Inverary" for their exertions. None of the family have suffered much from the shock, nor have any of the domestics in the castle received any injury. Her Majesty the Queen and a large number of friends made enquiries during Friday. The castle, I believe, is insured, but I need hardly say that no sum could replace the many articles of family and historical interests which have been destroyed.

The cost of restoring the Castle is variously estimated at from £15,000 to £20,000. The Duke of Argyle is of opinion that the building was set on fire by lightning, a loud peal of thunder having awakened him shortly before the alarm of fire was given. It appears that the whole insurance is £106,000, of which £80,000 is applied to the building alone, the balance to the movables. The early collapse of the cupola proved to be a powerful help in preventing the total destruction of the castle and its contents. The tower, in fact, acted like a great blast furnace seventy feet high.

The Canadian Trophy for the Paris Exposition.

The Canadian trophy for the Paris Universal Exposition, of which a photograph is being prepared for submission to the English Commission, will be 99 feet in height from the ground to the top of the flag pole, or 85 feet to the top of the roof. It will contain four stories, with three galleries, and be constructed principally of walnut and pine. The following are its dimensions: Base 30 feet; 16 feet 6 inches from the ground to the first gallery, 16 feet to the second, 16 feet to the third, and 11 feet 6 inches thence to the roof; from the base of the roof to the top about 25 feet. The lower story will be filled with cases for small exhibits, there being four cases of eleven sections each, making forty-four sections in all. This story will be decorated with wild flowers. The first gallery will be decorated with goods, and in the verandah are two cases elevated one above the other, with a roof on the top, forming a miniature tower. The cases in the centre of this section will be filled with vials containing geological specimens and specimens of agricultural produce. The gallery above is supported by ornamental brackets, festooned with rope and twine. The second gallery is about twenty-three feet square, and will be decorated with lumbermen's tools, agricultural implements, etc., while moose heads decorate each side. The third gallery will be adorned with a canoe suspended from its side, with fishing nets, spears, tackle, cricket bats and other sporting implements, above being a large buffalo head, and on the side corn brooms. The roof will contain specimens of shingling and slating, while at the top of the tower,

Shad in Lake Ontario.

The Rochester Union says:—"Our distinguished fellow-citizen, Seth Green, has just received information that is not only gratifying to him but of very considerable interest to the public. It is of a nature that confirms Mr. Green's judgment that shad can be successfully propagated in the large lakes. The information came from J. A. Howard, of Port Ontario, and is accompanied by proof of the news conveyed. Mr. Howard sends a fine male shad, weighing five and a half pounds, which he says was caught in a gill net six or seven miles out in Lake Ontario, off Port Ontario, at the mouth of Salmon River. The fish is the largest of its kind yet caught in the lake, and is one of those placed in its waters by Mr. Green in the year 1872. The attempt to introduce the fish in fresh water was an experiment. It is now no longer in the list of experiments, but a matter of certainty. The fish have been caught at various points on the lake ever since the fry were put in, and appear to grow as rapidly and possess all the qualities of the shad that are caught in salt water. Mr. Green now intends to go on with the work of supplying the lake with a large quantity of shad by liberating fry. States bordering the upper lakes have also tried the experiment of raising shad in those waters, and the people will be pleased to hear that everything points to the success of the movement. The French King who wished to see a fowl in the pot of every peasant in his dominion, could not carry out his desire; but Seth Green may place a shad on the table of every house in the State."

The Belleville Intelligencer adds, in confirmation of the success of Mr. Green's experiments that shad, which previous to Mr. Green's attempt at propagating them in Lake Ontario, were unknown in the waters of the Bay of Quinte, are now caught in considerable numbers by the fishermen along its shores, and that we have seen many of the fish, which are very beautiful and highly esteemed as food. Many thousands of young shad died in the lake, yet a sufficient number have survived to make the experiment measurably successful. The people of Canada, therefore, owe a debt to Mr. Green, as do his own countrymen, for as the shad have no respect for boundary lines, they are fast becoming an item of value in the accounts of the fishermen.

COBBOURG, Oct. 25.—The trial of the three men, David Smith, Marvin Welton, and John Cope Mallory, for the murder of Victoria Alberta Wade at Castleton on 25th of last May, commenced at the Assizes before Mr. Justice Gwynne to-day. All the prisoners are to be tried separately, Smith the abortionist being the first to come before the Court. His trial took place to-day, and after examining twenty-four witnesses and six medical men, he was found guilty, sentence deferred.

The Assize Court was crowded, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. The prisoner Smith is a man of seventy. He is the wreck of a once strong and probably tall man. He is now doubled up, toothless, and weak. His five months in gaol has much improved his appearance.

When brought into Court this morning he wore by no means the air of a man about to be tried for his life. He looked about him, nodded to his old acquaintances, and chewed his tobacco just as if his trial was an ordinary occurrence, but as the day wore on he became uneasy, varying his monotonous position in the prisoner's box, by walking up and down occasionally sitting down, and sometimes jumping up on the seat to look at the crowd.—Mail.

The steer careered madly down Broadway, scattering the multitude, and turning into Thirty-third street. Officer Smith of the Broadway police closely followed, rapidly discharging his revolver at the steer, without visible effect. At nearly every corner the great pursuing crowd was swelled, and the street was densely filled. At Eighth Avenue Officer Smith's shots seemed to be taken as the signal for an indiscriminate firing at the steer by the crowd. Hundreds of revolvers were fired, the bullets whistling in every direction. A gentleman who was about to get off an Eighth Avenue car on Thirty-second street says that he thought there was a riot, and stayed where he was. A bullet entered the chin of Anton Smith.

The steer, unharmed, continued its flight toward the North river. At Eleventh Avenue an employee of the Hudson River railroad aimed a bullet at the steer that reached a vital part. The steer slackened its pace, and midway between Thirty-third and Twenty-fourth streets came to a stand, seemingly dazed. Then Officer Armstrong, of the Thirty-seventh street police, and Thomas Wallace, a blacksmith, stunned it with sledge hammers. The steer fell, and the crowd poured upon it with revolvers, sticks and stones, and quickly killed it.—N. Y. Sun.

SITTING BULL ON THE STUMP.

DEALING—THE CANADIAN BLACKFEET TREATY.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—A Herald's special gives further details of the Sitting Bull Conference. It says that Sitting Bull in replying to Gen. Terry, said :—
"For sixty-four years you have kept me and my people and treated me bad.
What have we done that you should want us? I did not give you the country, but you followed me, so I had to come to this country. I was born and raised in this country with Red River half-breeds, and we are going to that part of the country. You came here to tell us lies, but we don't want to hear them. I don't wish any such language used to me that is to tell me such lies in my great Mother's house. (Alluding to Queen Victoria.) Don't you say two words more. Go back home where you came from. This country is mine, and I intend to stay here and raise this country full of grown people." The "how-hows" of the Indians interrupting this address showed the perfect sympathy between them and Sitting Bull. Several other Sioux spoke all more or less after Sitting Bull's style. A squaw also spoke, probably as a direct insult to the Commission as the office of squaw is degrading. Terry and Lawrence exhibited little concern during the proceedings, and the Indians, rather chagrined, were about to leave when Terry asked if they refused the President's offers. A long pause ensued, and Sitting Bull finally replied that he had told all he had to tell. "In that case," said Gen. Terry, "there is nothing more." This decision disconcerted the Redskins. Sitting Bull completed his insult by rising at the end of the conference, shaking hands with the Dominion officers, and addressing to them terms of affection and respect, while he slighted all Americans present, not even saying the Indian "Haw," or good bye.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—A Herald's Pembina dispatch says by a Canadian Blackfeet treaty the Indians cede about 200,000 square miles of the finest land in the Canadian North-West to the Dominion. Each band is allotted a separate reservation. Each chief gets $25 in cash, a coat, and a silver medal. The annual payment to each chief is $25, to each head man $15, and to all the others of the tribe $5.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31. The official report of the Sitting Bull Commission states that after the conference, the Canadian authorities conferred with Sitting Bull, and in answer to the request of the Commission as to what transpired, Col. McLeod addressed them, stating he endeavored to impress on the Indians the importance of their answer. He contradicted their assertion that they were British Indians, and pointed out their only hope was the buffalo, and it would not be long before this supply would cease. They could expect nothing besides protection from the Queen's Government while they behaved themselves. He warned them their decision affected them and their children. He told them they must not cross the line with hostile intent, and urged them to carry his words to the camp and tell their young men. He also pointed out that a few mischievous young warriors might do them seriously. They announced they would then answer, and promised to be true what he told them.
Col. McLeod thanks they will not cross the line, it is a pity not for us, but for them.

Lightning. The famous family seat of the Duke of Argyll was severely damaged by a fire which broke out on the 12th ult. Princess Louise and her husband, Lorne, as well as the Duke and Duchess of Argyll and other members of the family, were sleeping in the house at the time. As usual in a nobleman's home, means to subdue a fire when once it is kindled are ineffective, and for a time the water supply was miserably scant. Headed by the Duke and Lorne everybody worked with a will, passing the buckets filled at a running stream, and soon all the tenants and townspeople were on the spot. The accounts differ as to how the fire was first discovered. According to one report, a fisherman going to the river saw the flames burst out of the great central tower, and at once gave the alarm, and in a very short time members of the family, including the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, the Duke of Lorne and Princess Louise, were in the castle at the time of the fire, and had to take refuge in the Hotel. By this time a large number of townspeople had arrived in the castle and with the servants were busily engaged in removing the more valuable articles and extinguishing the flames. It was found that the main walls, the roof, and staircases were stone, and that the fire was limited to one part of the building, and some of the principal rooms were saved by the solid character of the masonry and by a copious application of water. The billiard room, and the bed rooms had their contents destroyed. Many thousands of pounds will have to be expended in restoring the interior of this noble mansion. Pictures and other valuables were retained in safety. Among the pictures is a portrait of the great Marquis of Argyll, and some of the family portraits. The Queen was early apprised by telegram of the fire, and the Princess and the other members of the Argyll family. The fire is estimated to be ten miles. The cause of the fire is unknown. The castle was on fire from 4 a. m. till 9 a. m. The building is about 140 years old, and is constructed of old red sandstone. Many of the furniture and antiques have been destroyed. A fine organ that stood in the north gallery has been reduced to shreds with 200 flint-lock muskets which had been used at Culoden by the Jacobites, and which had been artistically arranged along the walls of the 91st (Princess Louise's) Highlanders, which were, some time ago, handed over to the Duke of Argyll's custody, are also destroyed. The people were most active in their efforts, and as soon as the worst was over the Duke and Duchess called upon the most prominent inhabitants of the town and personally thanked them for their aid. They afterwards addressed a letter to the Provost, thanking the people of Inverary for their efforts. None of the family have suffered from the shock, nor have any of the masonry in the castle received any injury. Her Majesty the Queen and a number of friends made enquiries on Friday. The castle, I believe, is still in a ruin, but I need hardly say that no one would replace the many articles of art and historical interests which have been destroyed. The cost of restoring the Castle is estimated at from £15,000 to £20,000. The Duke of Argyll is of opinion that a building was set on fire by lightning, and that the fire was caused by a loud peal of thunder having awoken him shortly before the alarm was given. It appears that the whole cost is £106,000, of which £80,000 is to be paid for the building alone, the balance for the movables. The early collapse of the cupola proved to be a powerful aid in preventing the total destruction of the castle and its contents. The fire, in fact, acted like a great blast furnace, felling the high.

McLeod thinks they will not cross the line, at any rate not for some time to come.

Shad in Lake Ontario.

The Rochester Union says:—"Our distinguished fellow-citizen, Seth Green, has just received information that is not only gratifying to him but of very considerable interest to the public. It is of a nature that confirms Mr. Green's judgment that shad can be successfully propagated in the large lakes. The information came from J. A. Howard, of Port Ontario, and is accompanied by proof of the news conveyed. Mr. Howard sends a fine male shad, weighing five and a half pounds, which he says was caught in a gill net six or seven miles out in Lake Ontario, off Port Ontario, at the mouth of Salmon River. The fish is the largest of its kind yet caught in the lake, and is one of those placed in its waters by Mr. Green in the year 1872. The attempt to introduce the fish in fresh water was an experiment. It is now no longer in the list of experiments, but a matter of certainty. The fish have been caught at various points on the lake ever since the fry were put in, and appear to grow as rapidly and possess all the qualities of the shad that are caught in salt water. Mr. Green now intends to go on with the work of supplying the lake with a large quantity of shad by liberating fry. States bordering the upper lakes have also tried the experiment of raising shad in those waters, and the people will be pleased to hear that everything points to the success of the movement. The French King who wished to see a fowl in the pot of every peasant in his dominion, could not carry out his desire; but Seth Green may place a shad on the table of every house in the State."

The Belleville Intelligencer adds, in confirmation of the success of Mr. Green's experiment, that shad, which previous to Mr. Green's attempt at propagating them

The Canadian Trophy for the Paris Exposition.

The Canadian trophy for the Paris Universal Exposition, of which a photograph is being prepared for submission to the English Commission, will be 99 feet in height from the ground to the top of the flag pole, or 85 feet to the top of the roof. It will contain four stories, with three galleries, and be constructed principally of walnut and pine. The following are its dimensions: Base 20 feet; 16 feet 6 inches from the ground to the first gallery, 16 feet to the second, 16 feet to the third, and 11 feet 6 inches thence to the roof; from the base of the roof to the top about 25 feet. The lower story will be filled with cases for small exhibits, there being four cases of eleven sections each, making forty-four sections in all. This story will be decorated with wild flowers. The first gallery will be decorated with goods, and in the verandah are two cases elevated one above the other, with a roof on the top, forming a miniature tower. The cases in the centre of this section will be filled with vials containing geological specimens and specimens of agricultural produce. The gallery above is supported by ornamental brackets, festooned with rope and twine. The second gallery is about twenty-three feet square, and will be decorated with lumbermen's tools, agricultural implements, etc., while moose heads decorate each side. The third gallery will be adorned with a canoe suspended from its side, with fishing nets, spears, tackle, cricket bats and other sporting implements, above being a large buffalo head, and on the side corn brooms. The roof will contain specimens of shingling and slating, while at the top of the tower, on each of the four sides, is the word "Canada." There will be a circular staircase in the interior leading to the different galleries. The trophy promises to be one of the features of the Exhibition.

A raid was made at Yarmouth, near Halifax, by about twenty-five magistrates upon liquor sellers, there being no licenses granted in the county. Several places were visited and a large quantity of liquor seized and destroyed.

A royal decree, of Oct. 20th, promises leniency to persons accused of treason and rebellion in Cuba, and the return of confiscated property to recusants who submit within four months.

President Hayes says that he found himself confronted with three important questions, one relating to currency, another the civil service, and the most important the Southern question. Concerning each there was a large difference of opinion within the Republican party, and whatever he did was sure to meet with some opposition. He had no resort to act as seemed his duty regarding the financial question. If there were no President and no Congress he thought the action of financial laws would settle that question.

The Belleville Intelligencer adds, in confirmation of the success of Mr. Green's experiment, that shad, which previous to Mr. Green's attempt at propagating them in Lake Ontario, were unknown in the waters of the Bay of Quinte, are now caught in considerable numbers by the fishermen along its shores, and that we have seen many of the fish, which are very beautiful and highly esteemed as food. Many thousands of young shad died in the lake, yet a sufficient number have survived to make the experiment measurably successful. The people of Canada, therefore, owe a debt to Mr. Green, as do his own countrymen, for as the shad have no respect for boundary lines, they are fast becoming an item of value in the accounts of the fishermen.

A WILD STEER IN NEW YORK.

HUNDREDS OF PISTOL SHOTS IN THE HEART OF THE METROPOLIS.

A steer escaped from an English avenue abattoir, near Forty-seventh street, yesterday morning, and ran down First avenue. The hangers-on at the abattoir pursued the steer, shouting and throwing sticks and stones at it. A crowd of idle men and boys joined them within a few blocks. Maddened by the will pursuit, the steer ran, tossing its horns threateningly, to Thirty-sixth street. As the steer reached Broadway and Thirty-sixth street, Agnes Bradley, an elderly nurse, employed at 4 East Thirty-fifth street, was crossing. The steer tossed her into the air, goring her right side. She fell to the stone pavement, and her right elbow was dislocated. She was taken to her employers' home. The steer careered madly down Broadway, scattering the multitude, and turning into Thirty-third street. Officer Smith of the Broadway police closely followed, rapidly discharging his revolver at the steer, without visible effect. At nearly every corner the great pursuing crowd was swelled, and the street was densely filled. At Eighth avenue officer Smith's shots seemed to be taken as the signal for an indiscriminate firing at the steer by the crowd. Hundreds of revolvers were fired, the bullets whistling in every direction. A gentleman who was about to get off an Eighth avenue car on Thirty-second street says that he thought there was a riot, and stayed where he was. A bullet entered the chin of Anton Smith.

The steer, unharmed, continued its flight toward the North river. At Eleventh avenue an employee of the Hudson River railroad aimed a bullet at the steer that reached a vital part. The steer slackened its pace, and midway between Thirty-third and Twenty-fourth streets came to a stand, seemingly dazed. Then officer Armstrong, of the Thirty-seventh street police, and Thomas Walker, a blacksmith, stunned it with sledge hammers. The steer fell, and the crowd poured upon it with revolvers, sticks and stones, and quickly killed it. — N. Y. Sun.

The teachers-in-training at the close of the Model School Examination last week presented Mr. A. C. Osborne, the Head Master, with a silver butter cooler and knife, bearing the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. A. C. Osborne, Head Master of the Model School, Napanee, by his M. & P. Pupils, 1877." Mr. Osborne made a very suitable reply, and although he has been but a short time amongst us, the above expresses the popularity he has already secured in the minds of his pupils.

Illegal Fishing—Caution.

Two men were brought before the Magistrates at Trenton on the 26th, by the Fishery Overseer, on a charge of sparring fish in the river Trent with lights. The charge was proved, and the parties were fined $20 each and costs or 60 days in gaol, the fines being payable in eight days. This ought to prove a warning to other parties who might be inclined to engage in the same illegal business.

Warning to Sewing Girls.

A young woman, in the employ of Mr. Thorn, who was in the habit of carrying needles carelessly about her person, came in contact with the railing in passing up stairs, causing one of the needles to pass its whole length into the body. A physician was soon after in attendance, who found it necessary to cut down to the needle, and after considerable manipulating was successful in abstracting it, to the great joy of the patient, and saving her in all probability from a life of torture.—Picton Gazette.

FLINTON.

For the Express.

I hope you of the front enjoy as clear and bracing weather as we have since the equinoctial gales have passed.

Our farmers are now busy putting their places in order for the winter and are looking expectantly for the lumber merchants to come in and offer large prices for grain and labor. Vain delusion! At present, grain and all shanty supplies are down to the lowest figure, while shanty-men's wages appear to be only from $10 to $12 per month.

I take pleasure in announcing the marriage, on the 22nd inst., of Mr. Moses Lessard, jr., to Miss Adelaide Mercier, of Flinton. They were united at the R. C. Church by the Rev. M. Donohue, from whence they proceeded to the residence of the bridegroom's parents, where their relatives from far and near were entertained to a sumptuous dinner. In the evening the house presented such a sight as would please even my ancient cynical namesake. In one room waiters were busy dispensing a first-class supper to the neighbors and friends, to the number of some 150, while, in another, they tripped the light fantastic toe till daylight next morn. We hope the horizon of the young couple will always be as bright and unclouded as at present. They carry with them the best wishes of the neighborhood for their prosperity and success. Who is next?

Ignorant Grand Juries Condemned by Montreal Orangemen.

MONTREAL, October 25.—Last evening an unusually largely attended mass meeting of Orangemen, Orange Young Britons, True Blues, and Prentice Boys, was held in the Hall. District Master Mackay presided, and he, with others, strongly criticised the late action of the Grand Jury. The following resolutions were afterwards unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the Grand Jury, during the present term of the Court of Queen's Bench, in open violation of the positive evidence of two eye-witnesses of the dastardly murder of the late Brother Thomas L. Hackett, failed to do their imperative duty in bringing in a True Bill against John Sheehan, although he was fully committed by the Police Magistrate after due and careful deliberation on his part; and whereas a similar finding and commitment in the cases of McAllister and Ryan met the same fate.

Resolved, That the Orangemen of Montreal in District Lodge assembled do most solemnly protest against the present state of the jury law, as evidenced by the low status of the Grand Jurors and their gross ignorance, as displayed by the fact that thirteen of their number could not even sign their names, and were therefore palpably unable to arrive at an independent opinion or judge for themselves, but were evidently under the control of a small minority, and that such a failure of justice cannot but encourage similar outrages on the part of bloodthirsty and fanatical ruffians, ever ready to take human life on the smallest pretext.

We, therefore, call upon the Protestants of Canada, as lovers of Constitutional freedom, to rise as one man, and demand such a change in the laws as will place all classes and creeds on an equally safe footing, and thus inspire all with the confidence that murderers and their abettors

A REMARKABLE ELOPEMENT IN THE CO OF PERTH.

The Ellice correspondent of the ford Herald of yesterday has the following:—"In this township lives a well-to-do farmer, Mr. James Murray, who has grown up family, including a daughter about eighteen years of age, who is heroine of one of the most remarkable sensations that Ellice has ever produced. It appears that sometime ago Mr. Murray hired a man, a half-breed Indian named Atkins, to work on his farm on Thursday night last the girl Atkins were missing. The girl's brother started in pursuit, passing through the ford on their way to Caledonia, where they organized a search through Indian district in that vicinity. They found the pair in an Indian encampment in Oneida township, but not having the precaution to consult the authorities who passing through Stratford, they no warrant for the arrest of Atkins. The girl appeared to be in demented condition and either could not or would not give account of what had happened, her answer to inquiries being tears and sobs. She was taken to Caledonia, where Constable Thomas McCarthy yesterday morning, the latter with a warrant for the arrest of Atkins upon a charge of larceny, as he carried off some of his employer's goods along with the girl, thought that drugs must have been played in the abduction of Miss Murray, as it is impossible to conceive of her being loved with the far from prepossessing half-breed, the more particularly as was engaged to be married to a young man in Ellice. Atkins says he can produce a marriage certificate.

THE DEFENDANT IN LIQUOR CASE.

HE IS NOT A COMPETENT OR COMPELLED WITNESS.

Chief Justice Harrison, by the ment he delivered in the case of Queen v. Roddy, has set at rest question that has long troubled legal men—whether or not it is proper to make defendants in liquor prosecutions, under the Crooks' Act, competent or compelled witnesses. The appellant in this case was convicted on his own testimony being made a witness for the Crown in this city, where prosecutions for violation of the liquor law have daily taken great deal of the time and attention of the Police Magistrate, ever since the case into operation, the Attorney, the evidence has been weak and seemed no possibility of a conviction to make out a case, called the defer to the witness stand, and, under elicited admissions from him which ejected him to fine or imprisonment. Chief Justice, in the judgment where the Local Legislature was at in passing the law, and points out all convictions made by this means altogether unconstitutional, and should be shunned in future.—Mail.

A SHOCKING CASE.

On her way home early week she stopped over night at a house at St. Ann's, nine miles from Watlington, where she gave birth to a child which was discovered dead in her arms next morning. A coroner's inquest held, a verdict of infanticide returned, and the unfortunate girl was committed to Shefford gaol for trial. Meanwhile her mother was so overwhelmed

FIRE.

HEAVY LOSS.

An alarm was sounded about 2.40 on Monday morning, when the rear of Culhane's Hotel, south side of Dundas street, was seen in flames. In ten minutes two lines of hose were laid and the water turned on, the engine being located near the engine house tank. A very brisk wind soon caused the flames to envelope the building, and so filled it and the adjacent street with such a dense suffocating smoke and heat as to render approach impossible, and not an article of clothing was saved, the family barely escaping with their lives. Eddie Culhane, a young lad, was providentially rescued from a smoke-filled room, in which he had lost his way, by Mr. James Rennie, a boarder, who heard his cry for help; otherwise he would undoubtedly have perished. After the firemen got to work, one stream played on the rear of the burning building, the other being rendered almost useless in front through the high wind which carried all before it, large fire-brands falling on every roof for two blocks distant. As the hotel fire became subdued an opportunity was given to turn a stream upon Blewett's building, opposite, the roof of which was on fire in several places, and after strenuous efforts on the part of the firemen it was finally extinguished, but not until the building was thoroughly drenched from roof to cellar. Had the flames gained headway in this direction, nothing could have saved the whole block towards the north, as the ground is covered with wooden buildings, and as it was, the active efforts of the citizens for fully two hours, prevented the fire from spreading in many places. Culhane's building was of good, and built in 1832, by Daniel Pringle (deceased). It was the oldest hotel in town. The fire originated through a defect in the chimney, where the kitchen joined the main building, and was in rapid progress before discovered by the inmates. Mr. Culhane's loss is about $3,500. An iron safe containing money, valuable notes, and deeds was completely destroyed. Insurance, $2,350, in the Citizens and National. Mr. Blewett's roof was destroyed, and everything in the building damaged by water; loss, $1,600; insurance, $2,800 on building, goods and furniture, in the Lancashire, Queen's, and British American. Mr. Snyder's store, in Blewett's building, damaged by water; covered by insurance. Hooper & Son's plate glass was saved from the intense heat by an adjoining brick wall. The fire was extinguished at 5 a. m.

As the fire progressed a few professional grumblers expressed opinions that were little to their credit. The heat was so intense that nothing could be done on Blewett's building before the hotel fire was subdued, as no firemen could get within a workable distance. The engine was worked to its utmost capacity; the hose burst six times alternately, on each branch, and the water had to be shut off before a new section could be replaced. Yet, with these drawbacks, a conflagration was stopped that threatened, at one time, to sweep all before it, and for their promptness, activity, and persevering exertions, our firemen are indebted to the thanks of the CANADIAN JUSTICE.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW.

Montreal has got a precious set of municipal and legal officials. The French Canadian majority in the City Council have refused to pay the volunteers who were ordered out by the authorities to prevent rioting on the occasion of the funeral of Hackett, the murdered Orangeman; the Grand Jury, by a strict sectarian and national vote, has refused to indict men for participation in the riots of the 12th and 16th of July, though there was sufficient evidence to warrant sending the prisoners up for trial; thirteen of the grand jurors made their 'X' to their receipts for pay; the Coroner, Mr. Jones, in an inquest on the body of Hackett bamboozled the jury into rendering a meaningless verdict by falsely representing that the Government was about to conduct an investigation, and then, when he had to preside over an examination into the death of a young girl killed by an operation for abortion, charged the jurors that, as the girl had no friends, and no one was interested, it would be as well to let the matter drop.—N. The Philadelphia Exhibition.

The clergy of Philadelphia are still assailing the managers of the Permanent Exhibition for opening the show on Sundays. Sermon follows sermon on subject and religious bodies pass such resolutions as that "this desecration of the Sabbath by the Exhibition Association makes it the duty of all who respect the law of God and of the State in relation to the Sabbath to refuse to give their countenance or support in any manner or measure to the exhibition." (Another association tells the managers that they should "consider whether in the late troubles that have afflicted our State and country, the calamities that have fallen on corporations the downfall of individuals who have been conspicuous in connection with Sabbath desecration, they should not hear the voice of God speaking in His displeasure and saying to them, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." The attendance at the Exhibition is every Sunday equal to the aggregate for the rest of the week, and the managers show no signs of changing their minds.

On her way home early 1 week she stopped over night at a pul house at St. Ann's, nine miles from Waterlo, where she gave birth to a child which was discovered dead in her sate next morning. A coroner's inquest was held, a verdict of infanticide rendered and the unfortunate girl was committed to Sweet'sburg gaol for trial. Meantime her mother was so overwhelmed with grief when these painful revelations came to light that she was taken seriously and on Saturday last, in a moment of desperation, poisoned herself with a lot which it is supposed her daughter had been using to produce abortion, and died within an hour after taking the draught. Another inquest was held, and a verdict of 'Death by her own hands' was rendered."

The Paris Exhibition.

Germany has elected to take no part in the Paris Exhibition of 1878. The reason of her isolation writes a London correspondent, is not very far to seek. The exhibition has been designed to show to France, has, after a disastrous, almost overwhelming war, been able to retain her ancient strength, so that the revival of the country can be judged an international competition. The reason that influence France in promoting the exhibition are much the same as those of Russia, who will be a considerable contributor to the show. Russia is anxious to demonstrate that the present war is not so exhausting that the country cannot bring forward the proof of its industry. Probably the same idea is present in the mind of the Porte, who requested that a place should be reserved for Turkish manufactures.

Another Large Fire at Fredericton.

The Exhibition building at Fredericton, N. B., and two adjoining boxes, were destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. Several other buildings caught fire from the flying cinders, and were more or less damaged. supposed incendiary was arrested; much excitement prevailed in the city during the day, and threats of lynching the guilty party were freely indulged in. Loss $2,000.

The clergy of Philadelphia are still assailing the managers of the Permanent Exhibition for opening the show on Sundays. Sermon follows sermon on subject and religious bodies pass such resolutions as that "this desecration of the Sabbath by the Exhibition Association makes it the duty of all who respect the law of God and of the State in relation to the Sabbath to refuse to give their countenance or support in any manner or measure to the exhibition." (Another association tells the managers that they should "consider whether in the late troubles that have afflicted our State and country, the calamities that have fallen on corporations the downfall of individuals who have been conspicuous in connection with Sabbath desecration, they should not hear the voice of God speaking in His displeasure and saying to them, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." The attendance at the Exhibition is every Sunday equal to the aggregate for the rest of the week, and the managers show no signs of changing their minds.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COURT OF COMMISSIONERS PROPOSED.

The bill introduced in Washington by Kerman, by request, for the re-establishment of the Court of Commissioners on the Alabama Claims, and for the distribution of the Geneva Award, provides that the Court shall have three judges. The Court is to enter judgement in two classes of claims. The first class consists of the claims resulting directly from the damage done in the high seas by the Confederate cruisers, excluding the claims already allowed for damage caused by the Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah, after the latter left for Melbourne in July, 1865. The second class consists of claims for payment of premiums for war risks after the sailing of any Confederate cruisers. Judgements in the first class shall be paid before judgements in the second class. If the money appropriated by insufficient to pay the judgments of the first class, they shall be paid ratably.

The bill to provide for the further distribution of the Geneva award, authorizes claimants to sue the Court of Claims within a year from the passage of the Act. The bill authorizes appeals from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court, and provides for the payment of judgements, with five per cent interest in full, if there be money enough, otherwise ratably.

The Paris Exhibition.

Germany has elected to take no part in the Paris Exhibition of 1878. The reason of her isolation writes a London correspondent, is not very far to seek. The exhibition has been designed to show the France has, after a disastrous and almost overwhelming war, been able to retain her ancient strength, so that the revival of the country can be judged to be an international competition. The reason that influence France in promoting the exhibition are much the same as those of Russia, who will be a considerable contributor to the show. Russia is anxious to demonstrate that the present war is not so exhausting that the country cannot bring forward the proof of its industry. Probably the same idea is present in the mind of the Porte, who has requested that a place should be reserved for Turkish manufactures.

Another Large Fire at Fredericton.

The Exhibition building at Fredericton, N. B., and two adjoining house, were destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. Several other buildings caught fire from the flying cinders, and were more or less damaged. A supposed incendiary was arrested; much excitement prevailed in the city during the day, and threats of lynching the guilty party were freely indulged in. Loss $25,000.

Ignorant Grand Juries Condemned by Montreal Orangemen.

MONTREAL, October 25. — Last evening a unusually largely attended mass meeting of Orangemen, Orange Young Britons, True Blues, and Prentice Boys, was held in the Hall. District Master Mackay resided, and he, with others, strongly criticised the late action of the Grand Jury. The following resolutions were afterwards unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the Grand Jury, during the present term of the Court of Queen's Bench, in open violation of the positive evidence of two eye-witnesses of the dastardly murder of the late Brother Thomas L. Hackett, failed to do their imperative duty in bringing in a True Bill against John Sheehan, although he was fully committed by the Police Magistrate after due and careful deliberation on his part; and whereas a similar finding and commitment in the cases of McAllister and Ryan met the same fate.

Resolved, That the Orangemen of Montreal in district Lodge assembled do most solemnly protest against the present state of the jury law, as evidenced by the low status of the Grand Jurors and their gross ignorance, as displayed by the fact that thirteen of their number could not even give their names, and were therefore palpably unable to arrive at an independent opinion or decide for themselves, but were evidently under the control of a small minority, and that such a failure of justice cannot but encourage similar outrages on the part of bloodthirsty and factious ruffians, ever ready to take human life on the slightest pretext.

A REMARKABLE ELOPEMENT IN THE COUNTY OF PERTH.

The Ellice correspondent of the Stratford Herald of yesterday has the following:—"In this township lives a well-to-do farmer, Mr. James Murray, who has a grown up family, including a daughter about eighteen years of age, who is the heroine of one of the most remarkable sensations that Ellice has ever produced. It appears that sometime ago Mr. Murray hired a man, a half-breed Indian, named Atkins, to work on his farm, and on Thursday night last the girl and Atkins were missing. The girl's brothers started in pursuit, passing through Stratford on their way to Caledonia, whence they organized a search through the Indian district in that vicinity. They found the pair in an Indian encampment in Oneida township, but not having taken the precaution to consult the authorities who passing through Stratford, they had no warrant for the arrest of Atkins. The girl appeared to be in demented condition and either could not or would not give an account of what had happened, her only answer to inquiries being tears and sobs. She was taken to Caledonia, with her Constable Thomas McCarthy yesterday morning, the latter with a warrant for the arrest of Atkins upon a charge of larceny, as he carried off some of his employer's goods along with the girl. It is thought that drugs must have been employed in the abduction of Miss Murray, as it is impossible to conceive of her falling love with the far from prepossessing half-breed, the more particularly as she was engaged to be married to a young man in Ellice. Atkins says he can produce a marriage certificate.

THE DEFENDANT IN LIQUOR CASES.

HE IS NOT A COMPETENT OR COMPELLABLE WITNESS.

Chief Justice Harrison, by the judgment he delivered in the case of the Queen v. Roddy, has set at rest the question that has long troubled legal men—whether or not it is proper to make the defendants in liquor prosecutions, under the Crooks' Act, competent or compellable witnesses. The appellant in this case was convicted on his own testimony, being made a witness for the Crown. In this city, where prosecutions for violations of the liquor law have daily taken up a great deal of the time and attention of the Police Magistrate, ever since the Act came into operation, the Attorney, when the evidence has been weak and there seemed no possibility of a conviction, has, to make out a case, called the defendant to the witness stand, and, under oath, elicited admissions from him which subjected him to fine or imprisonment. The Chief Justice, in the judgment shows where the Local Legislature was at fault in passing the law, and points out that all convictions made by this means were altogether unconstitutional, and to be shunned in future. —Mail.

AN OUTSIDE VIEW.

Montreal has got a precious set of municipal and legal officials. The French Canadian majority in the City Council have refused to pay the volunteers who were ordered out by the authorities to prevent rioting on the occasion of the funeral of Hackett, the murdered Orangeman; the Grand Jury, by a strict sectional and national vote, has refused to indict men for participation in the riots of the 12th and 16th of July, though there is sufficient evidence to warrant sending a prisoner up for trial; thirteen of the grand jurors made their 'X' to their receipts for pay; the Coroner, Mr. Jones, an inquest on the body of Hackett absconded the jury into rendering a meaningless verdict by falsely representing that the Government was about to conduct an investigation, and then, when he had to preside over an examination to the death of a young girl killed by an operation for abortion, charged the jurors at, as the girl had no friends, and no one was interested, it would be as well to let the matter drop.—N. A SALAMANDER SHIP.—The Teviotdale, an iron ship bound from Cardiff to India with a cargo of coals, was abandoned on fire on the 1st of November, 1876, in latitude 11 deg. south, longitude 70 deg. east, near the Mauritius, the crew having been picked up soon after leaving the vessel. On the night of the 17th September, 1877, the mail steamer Hindustan, on her way from China to Suez, came across the abandoned Teviotdale two days before reaching Aden, and found the coal still smouldering in her hold. The fire had thus lasted ten months, and she had drifted about two thousand miles in that time.

A number of medical men have been examined before the Commission now sitting in Edinburgh on the subject of groceries' wine and spirit licences. They held, moreover, that the liquor obtained from these shops was decidedly superior to that obtained at the public houses.

In the Montreal City Council the complaint of the city assessors against Mayor Beaudry for abusive language came up, and was referred to the Finance Committee by a vote of seventeen to six. The assessors say that he has been guilty of the grossest abuse of his position, and has several times used language so violently abusive as to be unfit for publication, etc.

PETTIT'S EYE-SALVE.

An Infallible Remedy for all Diseases of the Eye (acute or chronic), Granulation of the Lids, Ulceration of the Lachrymal Glands, Film, and Weakness of the Vision from any cause.

THE AMERICAN EYE-SALVE is presented to the public with the assurance of its efficiency as a curative of most diseases of the eye, acute or chronic information, whether induced by scrofulous origin or otherwise, weakness or defect of vision, diminished tone of the optic nerve, or a diseased state of the tissues constituting that organ. Also, for all persons whose vocation requires an incessant action of the eyes, the Salve will act as a charm in restoring a uniform healthy action, where weakness, pain, and misery may have long threatened a fatal termination. It is the most simple, safe, and effectual remedy ever discovered. The materials of which it is made are pure, perfect, and costly, compounded with elaborate care and exactness, safe in its application, being used externally, and, of course, avoiding the pain and danger which necessarily attends the introduction of caustic minerals and eye-washes. RINGWORM AND OLD CHRONIC SORES, of scrofulous origin, or resulting from whatever cause, yield to the AMERICAN EYE-SALVE. IT IS USED SUCCESSFULLY FOR PILES. Its soothing effect is immediate, and a permanent cure requires but a few applications. The proprietors of "DR. J. PETTIT'S AMERICAN EYE-SALVE," while making new and improved machinery for making a more perfect box for the Eye-Salve, have changed the Trade Mark on the cover so as to correspond with the Cut on the Wrapper, Circulars, Advertisements, etc. We call attention to this, as it might otherwise be regarded as counterfeiting.

WOMAN.

By an immense practice, extending through a period of years, having within that time treated many thousand cases of those diseases peculiar to woman, I have been enabled to perfect a most potent and agreeable medicine that meets the indications pre-ented by that class of diseases with positive certainty and exactness.
To designate this natural specific compound, I have named it

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

The term, however, is but a feeble expression of my high appreciation of its value, based upon my own personal observation. As a close ob- server, I have, while witnessing its positive re- sults in the few special diseases incident to the separate organism of woman, singled it out as the climax or crowning gem of my medical career. On its merits, as a posi- tive, safe, and effectual remedy for this class of diseases, and one that will, at all times and under all circumstances, act kindly and in har- mony with the laws which govern the female system, I am willing to stake my reputation as a physician. Nay, even more, so confident am I that it will not disappoint the most sanguine expectations of a single invalid lady who uses it for any of the ailments for which I recommend it, that I offer and sell it under A POSITIVE GUARANTEE. If a beneficial effect is not experienced by the time two-thirds of the contents of the bottle are used, I will, on return of the bottle, two-thirds of the medicine having been taken according to directions, and the case being one for which I recommend it, promptly refund the money paid for it. Had I not the most perfect confidence in its virtues, I could not offer it as I do under these conditions; but having witnessed its truly marvellous cures in thou- sands of cases, I feel warranted and perfectly safe in risking both my reputation and my money on its merits.

The following are among those diseases in which my Favorite Prescription has worked cures, as if by magic, and with a cer- tainty never before attained by any medicine: Leucorrhoea, Excessive Flowing, Painful Monthly Periods, Suppressions when from un- natural causes, Irregularities, Weak Back, Pro- lapsus, or falling of the Uterus, Anteversion and Retroversion, Bearing Down Sensations, Inter- nal Heat, Nervous Depression, Debility, De- pendence, Threatened Miscarriage, Chronic Congestion, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Impotence, Barrenness, or sterility, Fe- male Weakness, and very many other chronic diseases incident to woman not mentioned here. In all affections of this nature, my Favorite Prescription works cures—the marvel of the world. This medicine I do not extol as a cure-all, but it admirably fulfills a single- ness of purpose, being a most perfect specific in all chronic diseases of the sexual sys- tem of woman. It will not dis-appoint, nor will it do harm, in any state or condition.

Those who desire further information on these subjects can obtain it in THE PEOPLE'S COMMON-SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of over 300 pages, sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.00. It treats minutely all those diseases peculiar to females, and gives much valuable advice in regard to the management of those affections.

...been according to directions, and the case being one for which I recommend it, promptly refund the money paid for it. Had I not the most perfect confidence in its virtue, I could not offer it as I do under these conditions; but having witnessed its truly miraculous cures in thousands of cases, I feel warranted and perfectly safe in risking both my reputation and my money on its merits.

The following are among those diseases in which my Favorite Prescription has worked cures, as if by magic, and with a certainty never before attained by any medicine: Lumbago, Excessive Flowing, Painful Monthly Periods, Suppressions when from natural causes, Irregularities, Weak Back, Protrusion, or falling of the Uterus, Anteversion and Retroversion, Bearing Down Sensations, Intermitting Heat, Nervous Depression, Debility, Dependence, Threatened Miscarriage, Chronic Conception, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Impotency, Barrenness, or Sterility, Female Weakness, and very many other economic cases incident to woman not mentioned here. In all affections of this nature, my Favorite Prescription works cures—the marvel of the world. This medicine I do not extol as a cure-all, but it admirably fulfills a single purpose, being a most perfect specific in all chronic diseases of the female system of woman. It will not dis-appoint, nor will it do harm, in any state or condition.

Those who desire further information on these subjects can obtain it in THE PEOPLE'S COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of over 300 pages, sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.50. It treats minutely of those diseases peculiar to Females, and gives much valuable advice in regard to the management of those affections.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets

Or Sugar-Coated, Concentrated, Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules. THE "LITTLE GIANT" CATHARTIC, or Maltum in Parvo Physic.

The novelty of modern Medical, Chemical, and Pharmaceutical Science. No use of any longer taking the large, repulsive, and nauseous pills, composed of cheap, crude, and bulky ingredients, when we can, by a careful application of chemical science, extract all the cathartic and other medicinal properties from the most valuable roots and herbs, and concentrate them into a minute Granule, scarcely larger than a mustard seed, that can be readily swallowed by those of the most sensitive stomachs, and fastidious tastes. Each little Purgative Pellet represents, in a most concentrated form, as much cathartic power as is embodied in any of the large pills found for sale in drug-shops. From their wonderful cathartic power in comparison to their size, people who have not tried them are apt to suppose that they are harsh or drastic in effect; but such is not at all the case, the different active medicinal principles of which they are composed being carefully harmonized and modified, one by the others, as to produce a most searching and thorough, yet gently and kindly operating, cathartic.

$500 Reward is hereby offered by the proprietor of these Pellets, to any chemist who, upon analysis, will find in them any calomel or other forms of mercury, mineral poison, or injurious drug.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For Jaundice, Headache, Constipation, Impure Blood, Pain in the Shoulders, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations from the Stomach, Bad taste in the mouth, Bilious attacks, Pain in region of Kidneys, Internal Fever, Bloated feeling about Stomach, Rush of Blood to Head, High-colored Urine, Unsociability and gloomy Forebodings, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of my Purgative Pellets, over a great variety of diseases, I wish to say that their action upon the animal economy is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative impress. Age does not impair the properties of these Pellets. They are sugar-coated and inclosed in glass bottles, their virtue being thereby preserved unimpaired for any length of time, in any climate, so that they are always fresh and reliable. This is not the case with those pills which are put up in cheap wooden or plastered boxes. Recollect that for all diseases where a Laxative, Alternative, or Purgative, is indicated, these Little Pellets will give the most perfect satisfaction to all who use them.

They are sold by all Druggists at 25 cents a bottle.

OPENING TRADE WITH ENGLAND.

Practical Directions for Shipping.
To the Editor of the Belleville Intelligencer.

SIR,—I trust the necessity of assisting any branch of trade between Canada and England and thus avoiding the impost of 20 per cent., to which our surplus agricultural products have been heretofore subjected on entering the United States, will be regarded a sufficient excuse for my frequent intrusion upon your valuable space. The trade in horses, cattle, sheep and dead meat may now be considered permanently established. Not yet, however, with poultry and eggs, and with an earnest hope that these articles may appear in our glowing list of exports, I beg to lay the following information before your readers:—To give an idea as to the extent of the increasing demand for these commodities, I cannot do better than quote from the return just issued by the Board of Trade, from which I glean that in the seven months ending 31st July last, poultry to the value of £114,741 was imported into England; this amount, compared with the corresponding period in 1875, is £26,846 less. The increased price of fowl of all kinds does not tend to prove that the decrease in the supply has been met by an extended home production.

Your readers will, I dare say, remember that with the first large importation of fresh meat ever made from America to England, February, 1874, I also had one and a half tons of poultry: this was sent to dealers in London and realised a fair paying profit. Several shipments have since been made, both alive and dead, but, owing to insufficient care taken in selection and packing, also that they were not consigned to parties in the trade who could secure a rapid disposal of the same, the attempts proved unsuccessful and the shippers were disheartened. With a view of assisting the successful initiation of this business I gained the following information from Mr. James Riddin, St. John's Market, Liverpool, who is probably one of the most extensive wholesale Poultry salesmen in England. I am confident if the following directions be carried out a very lucrative trade will result. I will commence with Turkeys. Select young cock turkeys, the heavier the better. Cock turkeys will realize at least 20 per cent more than hens. The neck should be broken and not cut, as one often sees them in the markets in Canada, bearing the appearance of having been worried by dogs. They should then be hung up to thoroughly cool, and not plucked, as the feathers absorb moisture on the passage and on no account draw them. Any kind of poultry will keep for a much longer period undrawn. They should then be packed in the same manner as the French and German poultry, brought to this country. That is in light wooden cases not necessarily airtight, about 7 feet long, 2 feet 6 inches to 3 feet wide and about a foot high, to contain a score in each case. They should be packed breast downwards; this is very necessary to avoid sweating, the cases should be marked "This side up with care." Be sure to not place the heads under the wings, several shipments last winter were spoiled in this manner. The heads go first. It will be found better to pack the heads in paper and keep them from coming into contact with the bodies. Place them as straight as possible in the cases that they may retain their proper shape.

The attractive appearance of all articles of export to this country is of primary importance, and our Canadian shippers have much yet to learn in this respect. Geese may be roughpacked and shipped in the same manner,—ducks and chickens also. Light wooden divisions might be made between each layer until the case is filled; they can then be placed in the refrigerator on board ship. The object in having certain numbers in each

BOGUS HALF-DOLLARS.

A MINT ASSAYER ON THE BEST WAY TO DETECT THEM.

Counterfeiters generally content themselves with the cheap and quiet process of casting from moulds, though sometimes they strike the pieces from dies. The mould is made from the genuine coins and yields a fac-simile. They use a type metal, somewhat hard and sonorous by the addition of copper, and the whole being slightly silvered over in a battery, and the gate neatly ribbed out on the edge. Such a piece may pass while fresh and new. They are, however, rather too white and too thick, or if of the right thickness, too light.

There is something about the genuine coin that ordinarily puts it above suspicion, particularly after the new white surface has given place to the inimitable nine-tenths tint. It may be abused by heating, or staining, or by contact with gum-elastic bands. It has been disfigured with tin-foil, for the small purpose of provoking a bet. In rare cases it may have a flaw at the edge, or shut in, which destroys the ring. But generally it speaks well for itself as to color and sonority.

The genuineness of a half dollar is something worth looking after, to any of us, and especially to storekeepers, taking them often through the day. It is, therefore, worth the trouble to have on the counter one or two witnesses easy to be had.

First—A balance, which need be no more than a thin strip of wood eight or ten inches long neatly poised. Place a good piece on one end and the suspected one on the other and have a weight of three grains at hand. If the difference is more than that, decline taking the piece.

Second—A liquid test, composed as follows: Twenty-four grains of nitrate of silver in crystals; one gramme (say fifteen grains) of nitric acid and one ounce of water. Any druggist can put this up, in a small bottle with a pointed glass stopper, made for lifting drops, taking care to use pure ingredients. Remove a little of the surface of the coin by a knife, and then touch the place with a drop from the stopper. If good, there will be no action; if bad, it blackens at once.

It should be observed this is not the compound we use for examining gold counterfeits and jewelry. And, further, some persons use nitric acid alone, which will discolor a good coin as well as a bad one.

As for the pieces struck from dies, they are generally such poor imitations that the taker almost deserves to lose by them. Such a piece, dated 1876, is now before me; good color, feeble and faulty devices right weight but quite too thick. It would be caught by the gauge already mentioned. It is a whitish brass, with silver plating, mere substantial than the electro silvering.

The writer has chosen to speak mainly of the half dollar because these are chiefly complained of, and the lesser pieces are less likely to be imitated. Still some men seem to take a pride in this despicable work, even if it yields small profit. In the long run counterfeiters are never enriched, and their sequel is generally in prison walls.

Penny Banks in the Public Schools.

The subject of school savings banks, touched upon by Mr. John P. Townsend in a paper read at a recent meeting of the American Social Science Association, is too important to be lost sight of now that it has been formally introduced to public notice in this country. On the other side of the Atlantic banks of this kind have been in operation a number of years with unquestionable success, so that objectors to the introduction of a like system here cannot plead that the scheme is impracticable or untried.

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum—or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible—Rubber and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, is full of electricity, and when combined with the pure medicinal gums, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and what one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-continued Consumption.

TO all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or ten postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

Geese may be roughpacked and shipped in the same manner,—ducks and chickens also. Light wooden divisions might be made between each layer until the case is filled; they can then be placed in the refrigerator on board ship. The object in having certain numbers in each case is that the top can be removed upon arrival here, and after inspection the goods can be immediately despatched to the various towns in England direct from the ship's side, and thereby avoid delay, which is so fatal in such a business.

Probably in no country, is poultry raising carried on to the same extent, and with such success, as in France. The official statement of the Administrator of Customs in that country shows that in the first half of this year, eggs to the value of nineteen million two hundred and sixty thousand francs were exported, and this year the enormous sum which went into the pockets of the French peasantry was 5,774,000 less than during the corresponding period of last year. Evidently this decrease must be met somewhere—let us hope from Canada.

I saw the other day a lot of eggs which formed part of a consignment of 280 barrels recently imported from Seaforth, Ontario. I was informed by Mr. McEvoy, egg salesman, Titheburn Street, to whom they were consigned, that there was nothing left to be desired as regards the Canadian system of packing—700 dozen eggs were in each barrel in chaff. The freight, $1.40, was, I thought rather high; that is compared to other commodities—flour, apples, &c.

It has now been demonstrated beyond doubt that eggs can be shipped from Canada to this country with profit, if proper care be taken. Precaution should be taken to have them fresh when shipped and kept thoroughly dry while in transit; nothing can save total loss if they become wet.

Several consignments which have arrived here must have been at least a month old before they were shipped. I am aware of the difficulty attending the collection of such a large number as 280 barrels, upwards of 235,000 eggs, but why not send them forward 50 barrels at a time? They are shipped extensively from Malta (16 days' passage), also from France and Germany; and I am informed on most reliable authority that the time occupied in transport from Canada is of no consequence, and that Canadian eggs are of good size and quality, and meet with favor.

I shall be most happy to supply any further information to any intending shippers. Eggs to the value of $2,610, 281 stg. were imported into Great Britain in 1876.

Penny Banks in the Public Schools.

The subject of school savings banks, touched upon by Mr. John P. Townsend in a paper read at a recent meeting of the American Social Science Association, is too important to be lost sight of now that it has been formally introduced to public notice in this country. On the other side of the Atlantic banks of this kind have been in operation a number of years with unquestionable success, so that objectors to the introduction of a like system here cannot plead that the scheme is impracticable or untried.

The management of a penny school bank may be described very briefly as follows:—Once a week an hour is set apart for the collection by the master and his assistant of the trifling sums saved by the pupils from their pocket-money; each pupil has a card or book on which are entered the amounts and dates of deposits, a corresponding account being kept on the master's book; and the gross sum thus collected is deposited in a savings bank of approved character to the credit of the school. As soon as the pupil's deposits reach a sum, say, of three dollars, a separate account is opened in his name, and his capital begins to draw interest; meanwhile, the accumulated pence and shillings of the less fortunate depositors, if they amount in gross to an interest-bearing sum, have a yearly income of their own, which is used to defray the expense of stationery, etc., used in the secondary banking operations, any surplus that may remain being at the disposal of the contributing pupils. Sometimes this surplus is divided equitably among them and added to their respective deposits, or, again, it may be voted as a gift to some charitable fund.

The influence of such a bank in educating the young to habits of economy thrift cannot be over-estimated; but its good work does not cease here. The parents soon become interested, and take measures to swell the amount of their children's deposits; from this the poorer among them are led to see the advantage of putting their savings at interest, and themselves begin depositing, either indirectly through the children in the penny banks, or directly in the public institution patronized by the school. It is thus that the spirit of providence becomes epidemic in a community; and as wastefulness is driven out, with its attendant want and pauperism, comfort and self-respect steps into its place, and the average citizenship of the state requires a higher tone.

Persons who have made a conscientious study of the workings of the penny bank system in Belgium, France and Great Britain are very anxious to make an experiment with it in the public schools of this country. The proposition is worthy of consideration. In some quarters the objection may be raised that our government is in no sense paternal, and that our public schools ought to confine themselves to the instruction of children in the rudiments of knowledge; but to this the answer is not far to find. The purpose of the elementary tuition now given is to fit other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for RHEUMATISM, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive, and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-sent Consumption.

Will Cure Consumption.

TO all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan:—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery and will send the recipe—FREE OF CHARGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which

Catarrh Remedy. Pain in Shoulders, Back and Lungs,

ST. ARMAND, P. Q., Sept. 13, 1876.

Mr. T. J. B. HARDING.
DEAR SIR:—Being desirous that others may know something of the merits of your CONSTITUTIONAL CATARRH REMEDY, I wish to inform you what it has done for me. I am 39 years old; had been out of health for about five years. I had employed three or four different doctors, and tried various medicines, without receiving any permanent benefit.
I continued rather to grow worse, until last fall, when I had become so bad as to be unable to do an hour's work at a time. Had severe soreness and pain under the shoulder blades and through the shoulders, with very lame back, and bearing it down, with continual dropping in the throat and down upon the lungs. Such was my condition when I commenced to take your Catarrh Remedy one bottle of which eased my pains and gave me an improved appetite and able to endure hard and continued labor, such as shovelling and clearing land, at which I have been engaged the past season. My recovery I attribute solely, with God's blessing, to the use of your Catarrh Remedy. Yours truly, HENRY SNIDEN

"THE GREATEST GOOD"

NAPANEE ONT.

Autumn in the Woods.

Every hollow full of ferns,
Turning yellow in their turns;
Straggling brambles fierce and wild,
Yielding berries to the child;
Oakbells tumbling from the tree,
Beachnuts dropping silently;
Hosts of leaves come down to die,
Leaving openings in the sky;
Bluebells, foxgloves, gone to seed,
Everything to death decreed;
Nothing left of flowers or buds—
Such is autumn in the woods.

And so is there an autumn known
To the heart. It feels alone,
Fearing its best days are past;
Sees the future overcast;
Fond acquaintance broken through,
Friends departed, friends untrue;
Human flowers cold and dead,
Covered by a grassy bed;
Hope's late blossoms putting out,
Withering soon and dung about;
By cruel winds; dread doubts and fears,
Finding vent in sudden tears;
Yes, there is an autumn known,
To some hearts thus left alone.

Yet, there's this thought after all—
Ferns may fade and leaves may fall,
Hearts may change or prove untrue,
All may look as these woods do—
Though sad autumn here is given,
Spring-time awaits the just in heaven.

A QUEER CLUE.

A Story by an Ex-Detective.

CHAPTER II.

Information was of course, sent to Miss Parkway's relative, who came sometimes to visit her. And the result of all the inquiries made was to make things look so very suspicious against young Lytherly, and so much stress was laid upon his quarrel with Miss Parkway upon her refusal to lend him money—which seemed known to everybody—that I was obliged to apprehend him. I didn't want to hurt his feelings; so I went myself with a fly, although his lodgings were not half a mile from the town hall, so a to spare him from walking in custody through the streets. I found him a home, looking very miserable, and when he saw me he said: "I have been expecting you all the morning Mr. Robinson.
I am very glad you have come."
"Well, I'm sorry," I answered. "But you may as well remember that the least said is the soonest mended, Mr.
Lytherly."

"Thanks for your caution, old friend, he says with a very sickly smile; "but I shan't hurt myself, and I feel sure no-one else can do so. Why I said I was glad you had come, was because from Sunday night when the murder was found out, until now, middle day of Tuesday everybody has shunned me and avoided me as if I had the plague. I know why, and now it will be over."

I didn't put handcuffs on him or any thing of that; and when we got into the street he saw the fly, round which there had already gathered at least a score of boys and girls, who had I suppose, seen me go in. He looked around, and said

"This was very thoughtful of you, Mr.
Robinson; I shall not forget it." We drove off, and spoke no more until we arrived at the town-hall. Here the magistrates were sitting; and here found a tall, dark, grave-looking gentleman talking very earnestly to Mr. Wirgrave, our chief solicitor. I soon found this was Mr. Parkway, the cousin of the

Mr. Wingrave introduced me, and I kind enough to say that there was necessity for detectives to be brougas they had so eminent a functionary myself in the town.

It was supposed that this would merely a preliminary examination, I it turned out differently. A few Lytherly's companions—although, as transpired afterward, they fully beliehim guilty—were yet determined should have a chance, and so subscrimost disreputable old fellow in the to-Jemmy soon came bustling in. He had a few minutes' conversation with Lytherly, and then asked that the he-was of course granted, and by the end that time he had overwhelming evihadn't slept a wink for his tooth-and he was with Lytherly until dim time on Sunday; and then accused went for a walk with couple of friends, and did not ret-until after dark, having spent two three hours at a public house some m-off, as the landlady, who happened to in the town, it being market-day, helto prove; the rest of the time he was the Bell, as was usual, poor fellow.

There was no getting over this. It was not a shadow of pretense for ren-ing him, and so—much to Mr. Park-evident annoyance—Lytherly was charged. He became more popular even among his associates, although respectable people of the town looked d-upon him, and they had a sur-old Jemmy Crotton presided. I def-

 Mr. Parkway left that evening, h placed his business in the hands of Wingrave; for there was no will, he the heir-at-law. Autumn in the Woods.

Every hollow full of ferns,
Turning yellow in their turns;
Straggling brambles fierce and wild,
Yielding berries to the child;
Oakballs tumbling from the tree,
Beachnuts dropping silently;
Hosts of leaves come down to die,
Leaving openings in the sky;
Blueballs, foxgloves, gone to seed,
Everything to death decreed;
Nothing left of flowers or buds—
Such is autumn in the woods.

And so is there an autumn known
To the heart. It feels alone,
Fearing its best days are past;
Sees the future overcast;
Fond acquaintance broken through,
Friends departed, friends untrue;
Human flowers cold and dead,
Covered by a grassy bed;
Hope's late blossoms putting out,
Withering soon and flung about
By cruel winds; dread doubts and fears,
Finding vent in sudden tears;
Yes, there is an autumn known,
To some hearts thus left alone.

Yet, there's this thought after all—
Ferns may fade and leaves may fall,
Hearts may change or prove untrue,
All may look as these woods do—
Though sad autumn here is given,
Spring-time awaits the just in heaven.

A Story by an Ex-Detective.

CHAPTER II.

Information was of course, sent to Miss Parkway's relative, who came sometimes to visit her. And the result of all the inquiries made was to make things look so very suspicious against young Lytherly, and so much stress was laid upon his quarrel with Miss Parkway upon her refusal to lend him money—which seemed known to everybody—that I was obliged to apprehend him. I didn't want to hurt his feelings; so I went myself, with a fly, although his lodgings were not half a mile from the town hall, so as to spare him from walking in custody through the streets. I found him at home, looking very miserable, and when he saw me he said: "I have been expecting you all the morning Mr. Robinson; I am very glad you have come."
"Well, I'm sorry," I answered. "But you may as well remember that the least said is the soonest mended, Mr. Lytherly."

"Thanks for your caution, old friend," he says with a very sickly smile; "but I shan't hurt myself, and I feel sure no one else can do so. Why I said I was glad you had come, was because from Sunday night when the murder was found out, until now, middle day on Tuesday everybody has shunned me and avoided me as if I had the plague. I know why, and now it will be over."

I didn't put handcuffs on him or anything of that; and when we got into the street he saw the fly, round which there had already gathered at least a score of boys and girls, who had I suppose, seen me go in. He looked around, and said: "This was very thoughtful of you, Mr. Robinson; I shall not forget it." We drove off, and spoke no more until we arrived at the town-hall. Here the magistrates were sitting; and here I found a tall, dark, grave-looking gentleman talking very earnestly to Mr. Win-a prisoner, saw Lytherly in the uniform of the Royal Engineers, and, in fact, had a glass of ale with him. The young fellow said it was his only resource—dig he could not, and to beg where he was known would be in vain. He sent his respects to me, and that was the last we heard for a long time of the Combestead murder.

I had left the Police altogether, and was living very comfortably, my good lady and I, up at Islington, in the same street with my married daughter, who was doing very comfortably, too,—her husband having a good berth in the city. I had always been of a saving turn, and had bought two or three houses; so with a tidy pension, which I had earned by 30 years service, I could afford to go about a bit and enjoy myself. Of course in all that time I had made the acquaintance of a good many professional people; and there were few theatres or exhibitions that I couldn't get admission to. We—my wife and I, I mean—made it a rule to go everywhere that we could get tickets for; and whether it was the launch of a ship, the charity children at St. Paul's, or Sam Cowell at the Canterbury Hall, it didn't matter; we went. And it was at the Canterbury I first had the Combestead murder more particularly recalled to my mind.

I was there by myself, the old lady not being willing to leave my married daughter—because, well, it was its consequence of her being a married daughter—so I went by myself. There was a young woman who sang a comic version of "There's a Good Time Coming" splendidly; and as I was always of a chatty turn, I couldn't help remarking to the person next to me how first-class she did it, when he exclaimed: "Hallo! why, never! Superintendent Robinson!" And then he held out his hand.

It was young Lytherly, but so stout, and brown, and whiskery—if I may say so—that I didn't know him.

"Mr. Lytherly!" I exclaimed, "I didn't expect to see you; and you're right as to my being Robinson, although police officer no longer. Why, I thought you were in the army."

"So I was," he returned; "but I'm out of it now, and I'll tell you how it was."

It seems he had been to India, and got some promotion after three years' service; and had the good fortune to save his Colonel from drowning, or what was more likely in those parts, being taken down by a crocodile, under circumstances of extraordinary bravery. He did not tell me this last bit, but I heard so afterwards. Lytherly was always a wonderful swimmer, and I remember his taking a prize at London. The exertion of the wetting brought on a fever and he was recommended for his discharge. The Colonel behaved most liberally. But what was the best of all the old fellow who kept the canteen at the station died about this time, and Lytherly had been courting his daughter for a good bit, more to the girl's satisfaction than that of her father; so then they got married, and came to England, and he was tolerably well off. He naturally talked about the Comestead murder, and said frankly discontented grant. I did not move, however, but remained quite absorbed in the study of this mysterious painting; and the more I looked the more convinced I became that it was copied from the scene of Miss Parkway's murder. There were several little points which I had not at first noticed, and in fact had quite forgotten; such as the position of the fire-irons, the direction in which the water had run, etc., which were all faithfully shown in the picture. To be brief, I had made up my mind before I left the room that I had at last found the real clue to the Combestead murder.

The Meeting at Odessa.

Last evening Hon. Mr. Cartwright, Finance Minister, addressed a meeting of his constituents at Odessa—the first of three speeches which he had promised the electors, giving explanation of a number of questions which vitally affect the interests of the country, and in which the people of Lennox, in common with others, are very much interested. Mr. Cartwright received a very attentive and respectful hearing, and as far as feeling could be taken as an indication, we failed to see any manifestation of a removal of the confidence which has been so long reposed in the representative of this section of the country in the House of Commons. On his appearance in the hall he was cordially greeted and warmly applauded. The chair was occupied by Mr. Sidney Warner, and in mentioning this gentleman's name it may not be taken amiss if we place him in the position which we think he personally desires to fill as a prominent resident of the Township of Ernestown. In the course of the recent planings and plottings of the Loyal Opposition it was ordered that the Hon. the Finance Minister should be subjected to another contest for his seat as member for Lennox, but Here the magistrates were sitting; and here I found a tall, dark, grave-looking gentleman talking very earnestly to Mr. Wingrave, our chief solicitor. I soon found this was Mr. Parkway, the cousin of the murdered lady. He was giving instructions to the lawyer to spare no expense; to offer a reward if he thought it necessary; to have detectives down from London, and goodness knows what. Mr. Wingrave introduced me, and was kind enough to say that there was no necessity for detectives to be brought, as they had so eminent a functionary as myself in the town.

It was supposed that this would be merely a preliminary examination, but it turned out differently. A few of Lytherly's companions—although, as it transpired afterward, they fully believed him guilty—were yet determined he should have a chance, and so subscribed a guinea for old Jimmy Croton, the most disreputable old fellow in the town, but a very clever lawyer for all that; Jimmy soon came bustling in. "But murder, will out, Mr. Robinson," he said, "and you will see this will be found out some day."

"Well, I am sure I hope it will, Mr. Lytherly," I answered him. "But as for 'murder will out,' and all that, I don't think you will find any policemen or magistrate who will agree with you there; and there was less to help us when you had got out of the scrape in this Comestead business than any affair I was ever concerned in."

"I don't care," he says: "it will come out, Mr. Robinson. I dream of it almost every night; and my wife consulted some of the best fortune-tellers in India, and they all told her it would be discovered."

"Hum!" I said; "we don't think much of fortune-tellers here, you know."

"I'm perfectly aware of that," he says; "and I shouldn't give them in as evidence; but if you had lived three years in India with people who knew the native ways, you might alter your mind about fortune-tellers. Anyway, you will remember, when it's found out, that I told you how it would be."

I laughed, and said I should; and after we had had another glass together, and he had given me his address and made me promise to call on him, we parted.

I told my wife all about it; and it is very curious to see how women are all alike in curiosity and superstition and all that; for although my wife had been married to me for 30 years, and so had every opportunity of learning better, yet she caught at what young Lytherly—not so very young now, by the by—had said about these fortune-tellers, and was quite ready to believe and swear that the murder would be found out. It's no use arguing with a party like that; so I merely smiled at her and passed it off.

It was the very next day that Mrs. Robinson and myself had agreed to go and see a new exhibition of paintings which some one was starting in London, and tickets were pretty freely given away for it; but the same reason which stopped my wife from going to the Canterbury, stopped her from going to the exhibition. I went, of course, because I couldn't be of any use under the circumstances, to my married daughter; and a

Mr. Grange is not to be transplanted, that gentleman's native modesty and retiring disposition would not permit him to take such an extravagant step; while his common sense, no doubt, prompted him to hesitate upon entering into a campaign which meant his political decapitation. But anything to beat Cartwright was still the motto of the Tory factionists, and since it was not at all possible to secure the nomination of a good Sir John Macdonald, equal to the occasion, it was suggested that a flank movement was expedient, and justifiable under the circumstances. Hence it was that we heard the gossips associate the name of Mr. Warner with the membership, and even as the audience assembled, the esteemed Chairman was pointed to as the probable future representative of the constituency. Mr. Warner has been and supposing the whirligig of events should lead to his election, the political complexion of the County would not be changed; but the Conservatives were prepared to be self-sacrificing, and like their leader, a trifle inconsistent, if party ends could be served in the slightest degree. But to settle the question, and to relieve the community of any suspense they may be suffering from, we may say that Mr. Warner intends to lend himself to no such arrangement, and thus the Tories have been again buckled, and are forced to the conclusion that they must meet the issue fairly and squarely; and in the general election, which is now not very far distant, unless we are much mistaken and unless public opinion suffers a sudden and unexpected reversal, Mr. Cartwright will be honored with a return to the place he has so creditably filled for the past fifteen years. The attendance at the meeting last evening fully numbered three hundred persons, whose conduct was of the most orderly kind.

THE FINANCE MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Cartwright, on being introduced, said he had never before, then, nor could he forget, that in the early stages of his political career, while yet a young and untutored politician, he had been elevated to the position of member by the material aid of the yeomanry of Ernestown; and he trusted that he would be able to prove to the electors of that township, as well as to those of Lennox in general, that he had not been unworthy of the trust reposed in him for so long a time. He had heard complaints—and he was

Many wischers said we should hear of Lytherly quietly disappearing after things had settled down.

Some little excitement was created by Lytherly attempting to get into the sole funeral carriage that attended the hearse; but Mr. Parkway would not permit such a thing, and was himself the only follower. It was very clear that the stranger, in common with many others, was not half satisfied with the explanation which had secured Lytherly's escape, and as I was on the ground at the funeral, I saw as did everybody else who was there, the frown he turned on the young man, who, in spite of his rebuff, had gone on foot to the churchyard.

Mr. Parkway left that evening, having placed his business in the hands of Mr. Wingrave; for there was no will, he was the heir-at-law. Now this was a very curious affair about the will, because Miss Parkway had told her landlady not many days before, that she had made her will, and in fact had shown her the document as it lay, neatly tied up, in her desk. However, it was gone now; and she had either destroyed it, or the persons who had killed her had taken that as well as the money; and even if the latter was the case, it was hardly likely to turn up again. So, as I have said, Mr. Parkway went home. The solicitor realized the poor lady's property; and all our efforts were in vain to discover the slightest clue to the guilty party. As for Lytherly, he soon found it was of no use to think of remaining at Combstead, for guilty or not, no one of any respectability cared to associate with him; and, as he owed to me, the worst part of it all was that old Croton, the lawyer, whenever they met at any tavern, would laugh and wink and clap him on the shoulder, and call upon every one present to remember how poor old Jemmy Croton got his young friend off so cleverly; how they "flummoxed" the magistrates and jockeyed the peelers, when it was any odds against his young friend.

So he went; and a good many declared he had gone off to enjoy his ill-gotten gains; but I never thought so; and one of our men going to Chatham to identify

But murder, said Mr. Robinson, he said, "and you will see this will be found out some day."

"Well, I am sure I hope it will, Mr. Lytherly," I answered him. "But as for 'murder will out,' and all that, I don't think you will find any policeman or magistrate who will agree with you there; and there was less to help us when you had got out of the scrape in this Combstead business than any affair I was ever concerned in."

"I don't care," he says: "it will come out, Mr. Robinson. I dream of it almost every night; and my wife consulted some of the best fortune-tellers in India, and they all told her it would be discovered."

"Hum!" I said; "we don't think much of fortune-tellers here, you know."

"I'm perfectly aware of that," he says; "and I shouldn't give them in as evidence; but if you had lived three years in India with people who knew the native ways, you might alter your mind about fortune-tellers. Anyway, you will remember, when it's found out, that I told you how it would be."

I laughed, and said I should; and after we had had another glass together, and he had given me his address and made me promise to call on him, we parted.

I told my wife all about it; and it is very curious to see how women are all alike in curiosity and superstition and all that; for although my wife had been married to me for 30 years, and so had every opportunity of learning better, yet she caught at what young Lytherly—not so very young now, by the by—had said about these fortune-tellers, and was quite ready to believe and swear that the murder would be found out. It's no use arguing with a party like that; so I merely smiled at her and passed it off.

It was the very next day that Mrs. Robinson and myself had agreed to go and see a new exhibition of paintings which some one was starting in London, and tickets were pretty freely given away for it; but the same reason which stopped my wife from going to the Canterbury, stopped her from going to the exhibition. I went, of course, because I couldn't be of any use under the circumstances, to my married daughter; and a very good exhibition it was too. There were plenty of paintings, and I had gone all through all the rooms and entered the last one. There were very few persons, I was sorry to see in the place, so that you could have an uninterrupted view of any picture you pleased. After glancing carelessly round the room, for one gets a kind of surfeit with pictures after a bit, I was struck by a gloomy-looking painting to the left of the doorway, and which I had not noticed on my first entry. When I came to look closer into it, I was more than struck—I was astonished. It was a picture representing the finding of old Trapbois, the miser, in the Fortunes of Nigel. The heavy dull room was lighted only by the candles which the young nobleman held above his head; and it appeared to be excellently painted. But what drew my attention was that, as a part of the confusion in which the struggle between the old man and his murderers had placed the room, the washstand had been upset, had fallen into the fire-place, and the ewer had rolled into the grate, where it was shown as unbroken, although the water was flooding the boards—all exactly as I had seen the same thing five years before—so exactly that I was perfectly sure no chance coincidence had produced the resemblance, but that whoever had painted this picture had seen the room where Miss Parkway was murdered, and had had the features of the scene stamped on his memory. Who so likely to have the scene so stamped, I instantly thought, as the murderer himself? As this rushed on my mind, I could not repress an exclamation, although pretty well guarded as a rule. The only other person in the room heard me, and came to see what had excited me so strongly. Apparently, he was disappointed, for he looked from the picture to his catalogue, then to the picture again, then at me, back to his catalogue, and then went away with a

But anything to beat Cartwright was at the motto of the Tory factionists, as since it was not at all possible to secure the nomination of a good Sir John Macaulay to the occasion, it was suggested that a flank movement was expedient and justifiable under the circumstance. Hence it was that we heard the gossips associate the name of Mr. Warner with the membership, and even as the audience assembled, the esteemed Chairman was pointed to as the probable future representative of the constituency. and supposing the whirligig of even should lead to his election, the political complexion of the County would not be changed; but the Conservatives were prepared to be self-sacrificing, and like their leader, a trifle inconsistent, if part ends could be served in the slightest degree. But to settle the question, and to relieve the community of any suspensions they may be suffering from, we may say that Mr. Warner intends to lend himself to no such arrangement, and thus the Tories have been again buckled, and are forced to the conclusion that they must meet the issue fairly and squarely; and in the general election, which is now very far distant, unless we are much mistaken and unless public opinion suffers a sudden and unexpected reversal, Mr. Cartwright will be honored with a return to the place he has so creditably filled for the past fifteen years. The attendance at the meeting last evening fully numbered three hundred persons whose conduct was of the most orderly kind.

THE FINANCE MINISTER'S SPEECH.

Mr. Cartwright, on being introduced, said he had no very far to go, nor could he forget, that in the early stages of his political career, while yet a young and untried politician, he had been elevated to the position of member by the material aid of the yeomanry of Westminster; and he trusted that he would be able to prove to the electors of that township as well as to those of Lennox in general that he had not been unworthy of the trust reposed in him for so long a time. He had heard complaints—and he was not disposed to find fault with them—that he had not made more frequent visits to the constituency since becoming Finance Minister. It is true the regular leaders of the Opposition are disposed to censure Ministers for quitting their duties at Ottawa to answer charges leveled against them and sown over the country but while these leaders were so opposed to this their conduct was such as to necessitate a rebuttal of these charges, a consequence of which he could not find time to visit Lennox oftener. Departmental duties involved close application on the part of the Ministers, and as for himself a large portion of his time has been spent in visits to the Mother Country, for the purpose of effecting various laws, besides which his position as Finance Minister imposed the duty on him of not only attending the sessions of Parliament throughout, but also of working after they had closed. They could readily understand why he had not found time to discuss the political situation with the people of his own constituency. On the present occasion it would be impossible for him to go over in minute detail the great variety of topics which have attracted the attention of the people of the Dominion, and he confined himself to the discussion of a subject which has agitated the minds of all—that of Protection and Free Trade—reserving for another occasion (at Bath) the financial policy, and for another and concluding meeting a refutation of those charges which had been personally directed against him at a late meeting in the country. With reference to Protection all those who had studied it knew that was nothing more absurd than the hearing proposition on which its advocates rely. The first axiom laid down was that it was possible for a nation to enrich itself by publicly and systematically purchasing goods at an expense in excess of that for which they could be procured.

prisoner, saw Lytherly in the uniform of the Royal Engineers, and, in fact, a class of life with him. The young fellow said it was his only resource—dig could not, and to beg where he was down would be in vain. He sent his respects to me, and that was the last we heard for a long time of the Combestead murder.

I had left the Police altogether, and was living very comfortably, my goodly and I, up at Islington, in the same street with my married daughter, who is doing very comfortably, too,—her husband having a good berth in the city. I had always been of a saving turn, and I bought two or three houses; so with my tidy pension, which I had earned by years of service, I could afford to go out a bit and enjoy myself. Of course all that time I had made the acquaintance of a good many professional people; and there were few theatres or exhibitions that I couldn't get admission to. I—my wife and I, I mean—made it a rule to go everywhere that we could get kets for; and whether it was the deck of a ship, the charity children at Paul's, or Sam Cowell at the Canterbury Hall, it didn't matter; we went. It was at the Canterbury I first had a Combestead murder more particularly called to my mind.

I was there by myself, the old lady being willing to leave my married daughter—because, well, it was in consequence of her being a married daughter to I went by myself. There was a young woman who sang a comic version "There's a Good Time Coming" endily; and as I was always of a witty turn, I couldn't help remarking to the person next to me how first-class it did it, when he exclaimed: "Hallo! y, never! Superintendent Robinson!" I then he held out his hand.

It was young Lytherly, but so stout, I brown, and whiskery—if I may say—that I didn't know him.

"Mr. Lytherly!" I exclaimed, "I don't expect to see you; and you're not as to my being Robinson, although I was in the army. Why, I thought I were in the army."

"So I was," he returned; "but I'm of it now, and I'll tell you how it is."

It seems he had been to India, and got a promotion after three years' service; and had the good fortune to save Colonel Brown from drowning, or what was very likely in those parts, being taken up by a crocodile, under circumstances of extraordinary bravery. He not tell me this last bit, but I heard afterward. Lytherly was always a natural swimmer, and I remember his winning a prize at London. The exertion he wetting brought on a fever and was recommended for his discharge. Colonel Brown behaved most liberally. But it was the best of all the old fellow kept the canteen at the station died at this time and Lytherly had been discontented grant. I did not move, however, but remained quite absorbed in the study of this mysterious painting; and the more I looked the more convinced I became that it was copied from the scene of Miss Parkway's murder. There were several little points which I had not at first noticed, and in fact had quite forgotten; such as the position of the fire-irons, the direction in which the water had run, etc., which were all faithfully shown in the picture. To be brief, I had made up my mind before I left the room that I had at last found the real clue to the Combestead murder.

LENNOX.

Mr. Cartwright Among His Constituents.

Protection Fallacies Exposed.

The Meeting at Odessa.

(From the Kingston Whig, Oct. 31.)

Last evening Hon. Mr. Cartwright, Finance Minister, addressed a meeting of his constituents at Odessa—the first of three speeches which he had promised the electors, giving explanation of a number of questions which vitally affect the interests of the country, and in which the people of Lennox, in common with others, are very much interested. Mr. Cartwright received a very attentive and respectful hearing, and as far as feeling could be taken as an indication, we failed to see any manifestation of a removal of the confidence which has been so long reposed in the representative of this section of the country in the House of Commons. On his appearance in the hall he was cordially greeted and warmly applauded. The chair was occupied by Mr. Sidney Warner, and in mentioning this gentleman's name it may not be taken amiss if we place him in the position which we think he personally desires to fill as a prominent resident of the Township of Ernestown. In the course of the recent plannings and plottings of the Loyal Opposition it was ordered that the Hon. the Finance Minister should be subjected to another contest for his seat as member for Lennox, but who had such standing and influence that there should be some show for Conservative success was certainly another and much graver matter. Mr. J. T. Grange, M. P. P., was mentioned as the coming man, and at one time it seemed a compromised 512 bushels of barley at a value of $450, and exported 9,920,819 bushels. Did the assemblage think it wise to retaliate on the strength of that magnificent sum of $450? He pursued the parallel by contrasting the imports and exports of $19,000 worth of other grain against 1,800,000 bushels of peas alone, value at $878,980. We imported a large quantity of wheat, simply for the trans-shipment of it to England by the St. Lawrence route, on Canadian vessels, manned by Canadian seamen, obtaining freights for our ships and tolls for our canals, the repairs of which were costly. The revenge was questionable which would take from our rivals the privilege of sending their grain this way and leaving their contributions at the doors of vessel men, merchants and shipping agents. And, on the matter of Indian corn, did they suppose any benefit would be derived from refusing to pay for two or three million bushels of corn, of which they re-exported two millions, the balance, with the exception of that manufactured into whiskey, being used as food for stock, as an excellent article of fattening. If retaliation was meant upon horses and cattle they should understand the effect. Last year Ontario alone sent to the United States 2,167 horses, 14,119 horned cattle and 85,628 sheep, while it imported 174 horses, 369 cattle and 8 sheep. By this table of facts it would be seen what a noble position they held for revenge. The result of retaliation would be that we would continue to pay as heavy taxes to the United States authorities, and be adding to our own at the same time. In looking over a late American review he met a passage, which clearly fitted the case of Canada. He had read it before in public, but could not resist the temptation to repeat it. It described Ontario as as fair a country as existed on the continent, as large as New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio combined, as largely adapted to agricultural purposes, particularly for the raising of comb wave sheep, without whose wool the industries of the Republic could not live; that it produced some of the finest barley, some of the best cattle, and its climatic changes, caused by the encircling of the lakes, was of the most excellent kind, and while it grew great cattle it was also adapted for growing good men. And, said Mr. Cartwright, if Mr. Wells had the same opportunities of inspecting the country as he had, he would have added, good women also. (Applause.) He himself was an advocate of Protection, but before he entered into his views he repeated the substance of an article recently published in a New York paper, from the pen of one of America's most able and upright journalists, Wm. Cullen Bryant, attributing all the strikes and contentions among workingmen, and poverty and destitution to the Protective tariff which shut out fair competition and free exchange of commodities. He (Mr. Cartwright) was in favor of protecting consumers, that is the class of people numbered by the millions, and entitled to a fair exchange of commodities if to a mutual advantage. He referred to the indirect results of protection. Practically and really, the only men who derived direct advantage from it were those who had a great command of capital, who find it a great profit, and who to-day demand Protection. He illustrated their position by showing that when these men obtained an artificial advantage, they caused a great diversion of money from other useful employments, and thus injuries were worked like those seen in the neighboring country. He enforced the weight of this waste of capital on the agricultural classes. It raised the rate of money, or prevented it from falling, as one result, depressing the value of farming land.

recalled to my mind.
I was there by myself, the old lady not being willing to leave my married daughter—because, well, it was in consequence of her being a married daughter—so I went by myself. There was a young woman who sang a comic version of "There's a Good Time Coming" splendidly; and as I was always of a shabby turn, I couldn't help remarking to the person next to me how first-class the did it, when he exclaimed: "Hallo! why, never! But what was the best of all the old fellow who kept the canteen at the station died about this time, and Lytherly had been courting his daughter for a good bit, more to the girl's satisfaction than that of her father; so then they got married, and came to England, and he was tolerably well off. He naturally talked about the Comstead murder, and said frankly enough, that—except the people with whom he lodged, and they were suspected he said, of perjury—he thought I was the only person in the town who did not believe him guilty of the murder.

"But murder, will out, Mr. Robinson," he said, "and you will see this will be found out some day."

"Well, I am sure I hope it will, Mr. Lytherly," I answered him. Mr. Grange is not to be transplanted, that gentleman's native modesty, and retiring disposition would not permit him to take such an extravagant step; while his common sense, no doubt, prompted him to hesitate upon entering into a campaign which meant his political decapitation. But anything to beat Cartwright was still the motto of the Tory factionists, and since it was not at all possible to secure the nomination of a good Sir John man, equal to the occasion, it was suggested that a flank movement was expedient, and justifiable under the circumstances. THE FINANCE MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Cartwright, on being introduced, said he had never before, then, nor could he forget, that in the early stages of his political career, while yet a young and untutored politician, he had been elevated to the position of member by the material aid of the yeomanry of Ernestown; and he trusted that he would be able to prove to the electors of that township, as well as to those of Lennox in general, other nations adopted the same policy? And if it was good for us it was good for other countries, which would legislate to have articles manufactured at home. But as absurd as this Protective system was, it is not to be compared to the monstrous iniquity concealed beneath it. The whole scene was the work of a few greedy persons who would fain enrich themselves at the expense of a whole community; and especially of the farming and other producing classes. He pronounced Protection a viper which produced political and social evils, would sting in every way, and into that which it has taken their fathers many long generations to perform. He knew there was a plausibility in the arguments of Protection as presented. If he asked his hearers, "did they want to be protected," they would unhesitatingly say "yes." But if he asked them did they wish increased taxation in order to bring this about, they would, or the great majority at least, would say "no." On the other hand they would also agree that native industry should be fostered, but they would unanimously say that the promotion of trade for the benefit of a few instead of the whole was erroneous. He need hardly say that it was out of the power of any government to produce commercial prosperity by Act of Parliament. If so they would be glad to relieve the country of its depression by such a cheap and easy process. The government were always desirous for the country's prosperity, for when a nation suffers from misfortunes to a great extent it reacts on the government of the day. When he refused to yield to public clamors and levy an additional taxation they might depend, whether right or wrong, it was because no genuine result was anticipated from it. When gentlemen came to him for increased protection to manufacturers, he asked them whether the people of Canada as a body were to be benefited, for if so none was more ready than he to grant their desire. But if they expect a few to be built up at the expense of the whole Dominion they would find that they had come to the wrong man. The Government would not be a party to any move of that kind. (Hear, hear.) If he could not agree with the Protection argument it was because he examined into the cost of his precious panacea. When he heard people talking of 17 per cent. and if it were altogether insignificant and trifling, he felt it desirable to refer to the enormous taxation represented, and what a deal more would be added if the tariff were increased to 20, 25 or 30 per cent., as frequently proposed to him by advocates of various industries. According to the evidence of the U. S. Commissioners and that of English capitalists they would find that every hand employed at manufacturing produced $1,200 of manufactured goods per year, a reasonable and fair average. The levy of 17 per cent. meant $210 per year, and they could understand, in that light, how grave an act it would be to increase the tariff. If the rate were increased to 25 per cent., that would demand $300 per year as individual taxation. Any further increase of taxation meant further taxation, all of which would come out of the hard earning of the people of Canada, and especially of the Agriculturists. He did not desire to see the manufacturers of Canada cost this sacrifice or anything like it. On the contrary the majority of manufacturers which were flourishing dispensed with anything like protection. Such industries as were healthy and growing were self-sustaining. The point was, whenever industries asked for increased tariff, the cost of maintaining hands was increased from $210 to $300, $400, or $500. He had made this statement on the floor of the House of Commons, and had never yet had an advocate of the protective system come forward to rebut it. (Hear, hear.) Those who believed in such direct taxation he cautioned to consider what were the consequences. Commissioner Wells, late of the United States Internal Revenue department, who was once a strong protectionist, but who, while watching the workings of the revenue system, found himself compelled to come forward and warn his countrymen that the system was sapping the springs of national health, and hastening such a

Cullen Bryant, attributing all the strikes and contentions among workmen, and poverty and destitution to the Protective tariff which shut out fair competition and free exchange of commodities. He (Mr. Cartwright) was in favor of protecting consumers, that is the class of people numbered by the millions, and entitled to a fair exchange of commodities if to a mutual advantage. He referred to the indirect results of protection. Practically and really, the only men who derived direct advantage from it were those who had a great command of capital, who find it a great profit, and who to-day demand Protection. He illustrated their position by showing that when these men obtained an artificial advantage, they caused a great diversion of money from other useful employments, and thus injuries were worked like those seen in the neighboring country. He enforced the weight of this waste of capital on the agricultural classes. It raised the rate of money, or prevented it from falling, as one result, depressing the value of farming land. This was evident in many places, notably in New England, where farm property had gone down, and city property had gone up, though the taxes had progressed in inverse ratio. Protection was little better than a recourse to the tyrannies of the last century or two of the world, when everything had to be ground at the Baron's mills, and man and beast were alike restricted. Such similar despotism had been in force in Lower Canada, in the Seignories, and Protection meant a resort to those practices which it cost their fathers millions of dollars to extinguish. Were they going to lay on heavier taxes than their fathers had thrown off—taxes which the farmer more than others would feel. He quoted an apt speech of Mr. Marshall, of Illinois, in Congress, showing how horribly everything in daily use on a farm was taxed. (He Mr. Cartwright) had intended to speak at length of a mischievous propensity among agriculturists—a mistaken tendency of the young in turning their backs on farming and crowding into towns and cities, with a view to engaging in seemingly more pleasant work. No one's laudable ambition should be checked, and it was one of the best things said of this land that every career was open to talent. The man beginning as a downright worker, assisted by talent, must rise. (Applause.) But he pointed to the errors of leaving the farm, and to the witness borne by the census of the over-crowding of the professions. Summing up the case: Viewed economically Protection was a mistake. In employment of men it cost enormously more per head, as high as $500; it led to direct taxation, a very undesirable thing just now; it augmented the people's burdens as a whole, and prevented that trading between nations which was the national life. At this moment, Canada stood the fourth or fifth maritime nation on the earth, and they should bear in mind that Protection would destroy the shipping interests and cut off the employment of those engaged in marine business. This was as important a consideration as the manufacturers' interests, for which the system was advocated. On political considerations he was opposed to Protection. The interests of the several Provinces were diverse, and an attempt to arrange accordingly would bring matters to a scramble. Moreover it would tend to corrupt the proceedings of legislators. He knew for a fact that on the eve of a change in the United States tariff, a manufacturers' agent was to Washington with a million dollars to put where it would do most good. He had not to learn that these men rented

Some one was starting in London, ickets were pretty freely given away ; but the same reason which stop- ny wife from going to the Canter- stopped her from going to the ition. I went, of course, because I didn't be of any use under the circum- es of my married daughter; and a good exhibition it was too. There plenty of paintings, and I had gone rough all the rooms and entered the e me. There were very few persons, e sorry to see in the place, so that ould have an uninterrupted view of icture you pleased. After glancing ssly round the room, for one gets a of surfeited with pictures after a bit, I struck by a gloomy-looking paint- of the left of the doorway, and which I not noticed on my first entry. I came to look closer into it, I was than struck—I was astonished. I picture representing the finding of rapbois, the miser, in the Fortunes ical. The heavy dull room was d only by the candles which the nobleman held above his head; t appeared to be excellently painted. What drew my attention was that, as rt of the confusion in which the gle between the old man and his erers had placed the room, the wash- had been upset, had fallen into the lace, and the ever had rolled into rate, where it was shown as un- in, although the water was flooding oards—all exactly as I had seen the thing five years before—so exactly I was perfectly sure no chance coin- ce had produced the resemblance, that whoever had painted this pic- had seen the room where Miss way was murdered, and had had the res of the scene stamped on his ry. Who so likely to have the so stamped, I instantly thought, as urtherer himself? As this rushed y mind, I could not repress an ex- ition, although pretty well guarded rule. The only other person in the heard me, and came to see what excited me so strongly. Apparently, is disappointed, for he looked from icture to his catalogue, then to the re again, then at me, back to his gue, and then went away with a the motto of the Tory factionists, and since it was not at all possible to secure the nomination of a good Sir John man, equal to the occasion, it was suggested that a flank movement was expedient, and justifiable under the circumstances. Hence it was that we heard the gossips associate the name of Mr. Warner with the membership, and even as the audience assembled, the esteemed Chairman was pointed to, as the probable future representative of the constituency. Mr. Warner has been

and supposing the whirligig of events should lead to his election, the political complexion of the County would not be changed; but the Conservatives were prepared to be self-sacrificing, and like their leader, a trifle inconsistent, if party ends could be served in the slightest degree. But to settle the question, and to relieve the community of any suspense they may be suffering from, we may say that Mr. Warner intends to lend himself to no such arrangement, and thus the Tories have been again balked, and are forced to the conclusion that they must meet the issue fairly and squarely; and in the general election, which is now not very far distant, unless we are much mistaken and unless public opinion suffers a sudden and unexpected reversal, Mr. Cartwright will be honored with a return to the place he has so creditably filled for the past fifteen years. The attendance at the meeting last evening fully numbered three hundred persons, whose conduct was of the most orderly kind.

Mr. Cartwright, on being introduced, said he had never forgotten, nor could he forget, that in the early stages of his political career while yet a young and untried politician, he had been elevated to the position of member by the material aid of the yeomanry of Epsom town; and he trusted that he would be able to prove to the electors of that township, as well as to those of Lennox in general, that he had not been unworthy of the trust reposed in him for so long a time. He had heard complaints—and he was not disposed to find fault with them—that he had not made more frequent visits to the constituency since becoming Finance Minister. It is true the regular leaders of the Opposition are disposed to censure Ministers for quitting their duties at Ottawa to answer charges leveled against them and sown over the country, but while these leaders were so opposed to this their conduct was such as to necessitate a rebuttal of these charges, in consequence of which he could not find time to visit Lennox oftener. Departmental duties involved close application on the part of the Ministers, and as for himself, a large portion of his time had been spent in visits to the Mother Country, for the purpose of effecting various loans, besides which his position as Finance Minister imposed the duty on him of not only attending the sessions of Parliament throughout, but also of working after they had closed. They could readily understand why he had not found time to discuss the political situation with the people of his own constituency. On the present occasion it would be impossible for him to go over in minute detail the great variety of topics which have attracted the attention of the people of the Dominion, and he confined himself to the discussion of a subject which had agitated the minds of all—that of Protection and Free Trade—reserving for another occasion (at Bath) the financial policy, and for another and concluding meeting a refutation of those charges which had been personally directed against him at a late meeting in the county. With reference to Protection, all those who had studied it knew there was nothing more absurd than the leading proposition on which its advocates rely. The first axiom laid down was that it was possible for a nation to enrich itself by publicly and systematically purchasing goods at an expense in excess of that for which they could be procured if move of that kind. (Hear, hear.) It could not agree with the Protection argument it was because he examined into the cost of his spurious panacea. When he heard people talking of 17½ per cent., as if it were altogether insignificant and trifling, he felt it desirable to refer to the enormous taxation represented, and what a deal more would be added if the tariff were increased to 20, 25 or 30 per cent., as frequently proposed to him by advocates of various industries. According to the evidence of the U. S. Commissioners and that of English capitalists they would find that every hand employed at manufacturing produced $1,200 of manufactured goods per year, a reasonable and fair average. The levy of 17½ per cent. meant $210 per year, and they could understand, in that light, how grave an act it would be to increase the tariff. If the rate were increased to 25 per cent., that would demand $300 per year as individual taxation. Any further increase of taxation meant further taxation, all of which would come out of the hard earning of the people of Canada, and especially of the Agriculturists. He did not desire to see the manufacturers of Canada cost this sacrifice or anything like it. On the contrary the majority of manufacturers which were flourishing dispensed with anything like protection. Such industries as were healthy and growing were self-sustaining. The point was, whenever industries asked for increased tariff, the cost of maintaining hands was increased from $210 to $300, $400, or $500. He had made this statement on the floor of the House of Commons, and had never yet had an advocate of the protective system come forward to rebut it. (Hear, hear.) Those who believed in such direct taxation he cautioned to consider what were the consequences. Commissioner Wells, late of the United States Internal Revenue department, who was once a strong protectionist, but who, while watching the workings of the revenue system, found himself compelled to come forward and warn his countrymen that the system was sapping the springs of national health, and hastening such a tremendous collapse and calamity as had since occurred. He here read the quotation from Mr. Wells' statement, showing the great waste the States had sustained through the protective tariff, millions of dollars being lost and manufacturers and the working classes suffering. He (Mr. Cartwright) pointed out that barely one-fourth of the people of Canada were apparently interested in foisting upon it this protective system, which had both in theory and practice been a failure among our neighbors. He had never held that the people of Canada had not suffered from the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty. The Americans had not, however, been able to injure us as much as they supposed they could. They had not succeeded in depriving us of the carrying trade. One thing had they done—they had awakened us (the Canadians) to the fact that they did not depend for existence on the States, but that they were old and strong enough, and intelligent and brave enough to stand up and fight their own way among nations, even if the Americans did carry Protection to an extreme length. Still the fact was, whether the Americans injured us or not, we were not in a position to retaliate. He emphasized the fact, because some people argued that when they could not have a reciprocity of tariffs, they should have a reciprocity of trades. Although the American policy had been injurious to Canada, it had been hurtful to themselves. Speaking of an exchange of trade, he instance the animals, on which there was a 10 per cent. duty, not as much as the United States enforced, yet considerable. In going into a policy of retaliation, it was to see how they were going to retaliate, and what the effect might be. He took it that not an article in Canada was likely to be affected more than barley, for which he hoped a better market in England than in disposing to the Americans. As far as Ontario was concerned, it was impossible to enter upon a retaliatory policy in barley, since, by the Trade and Navigation returns of 1875, it was shown that we imported to those provinces which it cost their fathers millions of dollars to extinguish. Were they going to lay on heavier taxes than their fathers had thrown off—taxes which the farmer more than others would feel. He quoted an apt speech of Mr. Marshall, of Illinois, in Congress, showing how horribly everything in daily use on a farm was taxed. He (Mr. Cartwright) had intended to speak at length of a mischievous propensity among agriculturists—a mistaken tendency of the young in turning their backs on farming and crowding into towns and cities, with a view to engaging in seemingly more pleasant work. No one's laudable ambition should be checked, and it was one of the best things said of this land that every career was open to talent. The man beginning as a downright worker, assisted by talent, must rise. The Premier is such a man to-day. (Applause.) But he pointed to the errors of leaving the farm, and to the witness borne by the census of the over-crowding of the professions. Summing up the case: Viewed economically Protection was a mistake. In employment of men it cost enormously more per head, as high as $50; it led to direct taxation, a very undesirable thing just now; it augmented the people's burdens as a whole, and prevented that trading between nations which was the national life. At this moment, Canada stood the fourth or fifth maritime nation on the earth, and they should bear in mind that Protection would destroy the shipping interests and cut off the employment of those engaged in marine business. This was as important a consideration as the manufacturers' interests, for which the system was advocated. On political considerations he was opposed to Protection. The interests of the several Provinces were diverse, and an attempt to arrange accordingly would bring matters to a scramble. Moreover it would tend to corrupt the proceedings of legislators. He knew for a fact that on the eve of a change in the United States tariff, a manufacturers' agent was to Washington with a million dollars to put where it would do most good. He had yet to learn that these men repented of their investment. The system was opposed to the policy prevailing in the Empire, with the exception of one or two small colonies. Whatever are the political influences of the British Empire, and the opinions on free trade, all are agreed that any other policy would lead to the severance of the connection between Canada and Britain, and none professed more loyalty to the Empire than the advocates of protection. Socially considered, Protection created surplus labor and led to pauperism. There were faithful advocates of the policy, but they were led away by the sound of the name, or from a desire to retaliate on the United States for its selfish and unjust policy towards Canada. But the kernel lay in the agitation of a few men who desired to enrich themselves at the public expense. He analyzed the cotton manufactory to show how a few men could control the market. In the United States four millions of people, brought together for industrial labor, are out of employment. He quoted from the N. Y. Herald to show that protection was the cause of this depression, that the restrictive laws prevented the sale of surplus stock, upon the sale of which there might be work and wages. He had no doubt they could divert 30,000 or 40,000 families from the farm and mow them in Toronto, Montreal, or other large places, but the experiment would cost immensely. So much for the making of a few millionaires. Protection and free government could not be co-existent, the former being a despotism opposed to all representative institutions. Visitors to the Centennial, viewing America's natural resources, were astounded that she should neutralize them by restricted relations with other countries. There are in Canada men interested, or imagine themselves interested, in Protection, but these people must not expect industries to grow quicker than the whole country, especially as it was governed greatly by the agricultural

THE EXPRESS.

NAPANEE, NOV. 9th, 1877.

VALEDICTORY.

THROUGH another turn in fortune's constantly revolving wheel, we have this week to announce the discontinuance of our connection with the EXPRESS—that with this issue we bid farewell to the Editor's chair with its many arduous cares and duties to fill an humbler and less responsible position in life's conflict. During the short period which we have been employed as a public journalist in the Town of Napanee, we have had warm personal friends who have given us their constant support and encouragement, and to those we now wish to return heartfelt thanks. On the other hand, we have had the

"Sold Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD." Has not Sir JOHN said all this and more (if the truth was known) in half the constituencies in Ontario, and do his friends now profess themselves aggrieved because Mr. CARTWRIGHT, after long patience and forbearance, has at last turned upon his assailant and has administered to him a terrible but most righteous castigation for his misdeeds?

The question for the electors of Lennox is not whether Mr. CARTWRIGHT has been severe, but is what he stated true? Who does aver it is not?

Has not Sir JOHN taken Sir HUGH ALLAN's gold?

Is he not living on the proceeds of money stolen from the people of Canada by the Manager of the Northern R. R.?

Did not Sir JOHN 'commit Canada to that most suicidal and absurd bargain with British Columbia?

Did he not negotiate that miserable abortion, "The Treaty of Washington?"

Did he not pledge his honour to LORD DUFFERIN that he was absolutely innocent of all the things Mr. HUNTINGDON had laid to his charge?

Did he not "Wish to God he could catch Riel," when he had actually sent the money to enable him to escape out of the country?

Did he not assert that he had ordered Mr. LANGTON to make a careful examination into the affairs of the Northern R. R., and did not Mr. LANGTON expressly deny that he had not received any such instructions?

The plain fact is, and this is the real cause of these people's undying animosity to the Minister of Finance, that every word he said here and elsewhere is true,—bitterly, shamefully true,—and therein lies the sting.

As Mr. BLAKE put it at Teeswater the other day, "Let them rave."

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S MEETING IN NAPANEE.

We regret that owing to our publishing in full Mr. CARTWRIGHT's speech at Odessa, we shall not be able to give a complete account of the Napanee meeting until next week.

Although the day had been very stormy, and the roads almost impassable, yet a very large number of the electors of Lennox assembled in the Town Hall to listen to the able address of their representative, while many had to go away, not being able to get either standing or sitting room.

On motion of H. M. DEROCHE, M. P. P., seconded by A. L. MORDEN, Esq., the chair was taken by the Mayor, W. S. WILLIAMS, Esq., who called to the platform H. M. DEROCHE, Esq., G. STRIKER and J. T. GRANGE, M. P. P.'s, Hon. JNO. STEVENSON, A. L. MORDEN, Esq., and other gentlemen.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT, on coming forward, was greeted by hearty cheers, which were repeated when he was introduced by the chairman. He replied at some length to the financial fallacies of Dr. TUPPER, and the unfounded slanders brought against him at the late Conservative Demonstration here, completely refuting every charge, and clearly justifying his own policy as Minister of Finance.

But it was to Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, and to a careful scrutiny of his character

Every Conservative journal advocates Protection, and the whole party is imbued with protectionist principles.—Peterboro' Review.

How about the London Free Press and the Toronto Leader, the most ably dited Conservative journals in Canada? Does the Review forget they are advocates of Free Trade and denounce the course followed by the Mail and papers of that ilk?—Times.

The Protectionists contend that Protection will not enhance the price of manufactured goods. Is there an emerald tint observed in the albino portion of the public optic? If prices are to remain as they are, why this clamor for Protection? What downy innocents the manufacturers must take the people to be if they think that the latter do not perfectly understand their little game.

The Montreal Gazette, edited by our friend Tom White, in high jubilee over Mr. LAURIE's defeat. Tom seems to have sold himself, body and soul, to the influence which chiefly caused Mr. LAURIE's defeat. But with all his subserviency, he does not manage to get elected for anywhere himself.

There was an old boy named Macdougall, Who used to play the fiddle; But he deserted the fiddle For the thirty silver bits.

Did that reversible boy called Macdougall.

—After J. Burr-Blumb.

It is no new thing for Sir JOHN to be caught fibbing. If frequency to act in that direction constituted a claim to distinction, then the championship must go to the Tory leader by a large majority. In fact, there is no limit to the record of unvaracity which Sir JOHN has piled up against himself during his political career. It would be as easy to wash the Ethiopian white as to prove that Sir JOHN Macdonald was addicted to telling the truth.—London Advertiser.

Sir JOHN Macdonald in his great speech at the Hamilton demonstration, said he would go in for the most stringent liquor law. He believed that if Mr. Crook's Act was carried out with some improvements, and if it was declared that every person who sold liquor without a license should be guilty of a felon which would be punished with the Penitentiary, it would do much good. We shall look for some stringent liquor law when the Conservatives get into power.—Thorold Post.

SUCH SUSPICIONS.—Sir JOHN Macdonald is inclined to suspect persons who exalt Canadian nationality of unfriendliness to Great Britain. It would be just as fair to suspect persons who exalt the British connection of unfriendliness to Canada, and in both cases it would be senseless. Such suspicions are easily expressed, and can do nothing but mischief. These two ideas do not in any way contradict each other, and it is those who proclaim such suspicions who are responsible for any conflict of notions and feelings which may grow out of true patriotism.—Witness.

Darwin is a profound and tireless investigator of Nature, and devotes years to building up his system bit by bit, collecting his facts with a patience which nothing can exhaust. But notwithstanding the profundity of his researches into the mysterious processes of Nature, notwithstanding his mining down into the depths where Truth lies imbedded, his courageous soul has not yet dared to solve the as yet inscrutable problem why nine-tenths of our bank clerks are Conservatives. They are living, eloquent testimonies of the reality of the Conservative reaction.

SIR JOHN'S SECTARIAN INSULTS.

The Chatham Banner says that "many of the Roman Catholic electors who were present at the John A. demonstration in that town on the 10th ult. feel deeply aggrieved at the insulting reference to the Pope made by Sir JOHN, who sneered at his infallibility in speaking of him and George Brown, as the only infallible men in the world. This sneer at the doctrine of the infallibility of the

ANOTHER SLANDER SLAIN.

MR. BLAKE'S SUPERANNUATION OF LATE CHAPLAIN OF THE PENITENTIARY.—THE CASE EFFECTUALLY DISPOSED OF.

At Teeswater Mr. Blake took occasion to deal with a slander that had been started for the purpose of injuring him. I said:—As I have mentioned the superannuation, I take the opportunity to advert to a charge lately made by one of the leaders of the Opposition with reference to a superannuation which I place in my office—that of the late chaplain of the Kingston Penitentiary, Mr. MULKINS, who is said to have been superannuated in order that he might marry and that a place might be found for Mr. CARTWRIGHT, a brother of the Finance Minister. It was said with equal wit a delicacy that, having become too ill to act as chaplain, he took the opportunity of marrying, and that having nothing better to do, he had since died; where if he had remained in the office he would have been still doing his duty as chaplain. With Mr. MULKINS' private affairs I am not so well acquainted as the speaker but I am told that he had been married some six years before his retirement. I was nearly 65 years old, and had served 25 years when superannuated. My health had been impaired for some years owing chiefly to typhoid fever, which had contracted while visiting prisoners and to repeated attacks of which he was yearly subjected from the slightest cause. He submitted some years ago that it was not fair under these circumstances that he should be forced to continue in the office at the peril of these attacks, as his health had already been impaired and his constitution undermined by their recurrence; and he applied for leave of absence, which was granted on condition of his employing a substitute approved by the Board of Penitentiary Directors. The Board reported to the Minister that Mr. MULKINS had nominated the Rev. E. CARTWRIGHT, which arrangement was satisfactory to them, they having ascertained from the Warden that Mr. Cartwright was a clergyman in good standing, a well qualified to discharge the duties of chaplain to the Penitentiary. In the course of the inquiries prior to that transaction, Dr. LAVELL, the Penitentiary surgeon, certified that Mr. MULKINS had had repeated attacks of typhoid fever with the present six of seven years; and that he was subject to relapses from the slightest causes. The Rev. Mr. DODD, a respectable clergyman, also gave certificate to the same effect. Mr. MULKINS went abroad for sometime (Mr. Cartwright discharging his duties, as chaplain,) and on his return in June 1875, he brought a certificate from an English physician that he had treated him from an act of bronchitis, attended with severe congestion of the lungs, and that he considered it essential that Mr. MULKINS should have absolute rest, and that he should resort to a warmer climate. He applied to be relieved from his duties, but he also applied for the addition to the allowance of some years of service, which it was in the power of the Government to grant. I refused that addition, but thought it my duty, under the circumstances I have mentioned, and having formed the opinion that the duties of chaplain could not be efficiently discharged by Mr. MULKINS, to agree to his superannuation. I recommended that act; am responsible for it, and I am quite prepared to defend it. After the superannuation of Mr. MULKINS, it became my duty to recommend some one for the vacant office. Having ascertained the expectations which the Board of Directors had formed with reference to the suitability of Mr. Cartwright, I believed him to be more than qualified, I believed him to be a fit person for the office of which he has been discharging the duties; I therefore offered it to him; he accepted it, and was appointed. THROUGH another turn in fortune's constantly revolving wheel, we have this week to announce the discontinuance of our connection with the EXPRESS—that with this issue we bid farewell to the Editor's chair with its many arduous cares and duties to fill an humbler and less responsible position in life's conflict. During the short period which we have been employed as a public journalist in the Town of Napanee, we have had warm personal friends who have given us their constant support and encouragement, and to those we now wish to return heartfelt thanks. On the other hand, we have had the usual small disagreements and occasional exchange of blows with our local confrere over matters of local and political import; still, on our part at least, it has been always done in a spirit of hearty good-will, and we retire bearing nothing but feelings of kindness towards those with whom we have come in contact. Towards the party for which the EXPRESS has always stood a firm advocate, we have endeavored to do our whole duty, and if we have failed in any single part, we wish it to be rather credited to lack of judgment than will. In committing our charge to Mr. WM. C. SCOTT, we feel that his long experience as a practical printer, his staunch adherence to the Reform party and its principles, and withal his business tact and ability will ensure him greater results than we have been able to attain. We have only to bespeak for him continued and ever-increasing support from all our friends, and wish him, the EXPRESS, and the Reform party unlimited success in future.

Before pronouncing a final adieu, we would just remind our patrons that a large number of subscriptions are over a year in arrears. These accounts will be sent out in the next issue, and we have to ask for an immediate settlement of all such claims. Accounts for job work and advertising up to the date of this issue must also be paid in at once to enable us to close up our affairs in connection with the paper. All accounts should be paid at once at the EXPRESS office, or to the agents, who will commence an immediate canvass of the county.

TIT FOR TAT.

As Mr. BLAKE put it at Tecumseh the other day, "Let them rave."

MR. CARTWRIGHT'S MEETING IN NAPANEE.

We regret that owing to our publishing in full Mr. CARTWRIGHT'S speech at Odessa, we shall not be able to give a complete account of the Napanee meeting until next week.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT, on coming forward, was greeted by hearty cheers, which were repeated when he was introduced by the chairman. He replied at some length to the financial fallacies of Dr. TUPPER, and the unfounded slanders brought against him at the late Conservative Demonstration here, completely refuting every charge, and clearly justifying his own policy as Minister of Finance.

But it was to Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, and to a careful review of his character and career that he especially devoted his attention. His analysis of the good and bad points of the "Chieftain" was masterly and elicited frequent outbursts of applause. Never was the noble Knight of Kingston so ably handled before and it was really a study to watch the lengthening countenances of the few Tories present as the weaknesses, follies and crimes of their leader, one after another, were disclosed and dissected by the speaker with unerring skill.

He ably exposed the hypocrisy and hollowness of the professions of those who like one confrere of the Standard, while professing to be the advocates of morality and temperance can yet lend their influence, and give their support to a man so lost to all sense of shame as Sir JOHN has frequently shown himself to be.

What can be more disgraceful to the good name of Canada, than for a man who has been her Premier, to make the disgraceful exhibition of himself, Sir JOHN has done at some of his meetings lately, notably at Whitby and St. Thomas, and in deed, nothing shows more forcibly the depths of the degradation into which a once great party has fallen, than the maintenance as the leader of that party, of the hero of the Pacific Scandal.

Does the Standard believe that the honorable, respectable Conservatives of Lennox will accept as their leader such a man; that they will follow a man who does not dare to go to England to be sworn in as a member of the Privy Council?

Did the Standard believe that the temperance men of Lennox will be trailed in the mire after a man whose whole life and actions are a protest against the principles they profess, who scoffs at temperance and totalitarians?

Does our religious and moral contemporary believe that the electors of Lennox are to be hoodwinked in this manner? If it does, men were never so mistaken before.

The three meetings held by Mr. CARTWRIGHT at Odessa, Bath, and Napanee, and attended, as they were by large audiences, all give evidence that he has not lost his hold upon the affections of the people of Lennox, that his able administration of the important department of Finance, his honest, upright character, being as it is in such striking contrast with that of his opponents and their Chief, and his able defense of himself have strengthened, not weakened, the confi-some stringent liquor law when the Conservatives get into power.—Thorold Post.

SIR JOHN'S SECTARIAN INSULTS.

The Chatham Banner says that "many of the Roman Catholic electors who were present at the John A. demonstration in that town on the 10th ult. feel deeply aggrieved at the insulting reference to the Pope made by Sir John, who sneered at his infallibility in speaking of him and George Brown, as the only infallible men in the world. This sneer at the doctrine of the infallibility of the Head of the Church in all questions of faith and morals was as offensive as it was uncalled for, and it is not surprising that the Catholic people should resent the insult. He may urge that it was a slip of the tongue, but, 'out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh.'"

JOHN A.'S TEA-POT QUESTION.

Considerable pother was made at the time and has been since the last small additional duty was put upon tea. Tory stumpers, and particularly the chieftain, have seized every opportunity of manufacturing "old woman" indignation against the Government on the tea-pot question. Now, suppose we put the oil can against the tea-pot. When the duty on tea was imposed that on coal oil was removed. Putting one over against the other how has the "old woman's" purse been affected by the change? The price of tea has not been appreciably increased, while that of coal oil has been very largely reduced. Light is at least as essential to domestic happiness as drink. And if a decided saving has been effected on these two articles of home consumption put together, we have no difficulty or hesitation in pronouncing the "old woman" (about whom Sir John betrays such a mock concern) as being perfectly satisfied with the Hon. Mr. Cartwright's adjustment of the tariff in her behalf.—Whig.

TWO CLASSES OF TORIES.

At a meeting held in his constituency the other day, Mr. Metcalfe, M. P. for East York, divided Tories into two classes, and this is the way he did it:

"There were two sorts of Conservatives he had met with in his election experience. In his first election he called on an old gentleman, who received him courteously, listened to what he had to say, and then, while avowing his personal respect, regretted he could not conscientiously vote for a Reformer. He (Mr. M.) believed the old gentleman was quite sincere, and respected him for his consistency. But he met soon after, in Markham, a Conservative of another sort. The man was perfectly rabid, and when asked for his vote flew into a perfect passion, and declared all Reformers were knaves, robbers, Methodists—(loud laughter)—horse thieves, and rascals generally."

In a course of the inquiries prior to that transaction, Dr. Lavell, the Penitentiary's geon, certified that Mr. Mulkins had 1 repeated attacks of typhoid fever with the present six of seven years; and that he was subject to relapses from slightest causes. The Rev. Mr. Dod a respectable clergyman, also gave certificate to the same effect. 1 Mulkins went abroad for sometime (2 Cartwright discharging his duties, chaplain,) and on his return in Ju 1875, he brought a certificate from English physician that he had treat him from an act of bronchitis, attend with severe congestion of the lungs, a that he considered it essential that 3 Mulkins should have absolute rest, a that he should resort to a warmer clima He applied to be relieved from his duty but he also applied for the addition to allowance of some years of service, wh it was in the power of the Governm to grant. I refused that addition, but thought it my duty, under the circu stances I have mentioned, and havi formed the opinion that the duties chaplain could not be efficiently discha by Mr. Mulkins, to agree to his sup annuation. I recommended that act; am responsible for it, and I am qu prepared to defend it. After the sup annation of Mr. Mulkins, it becam my duty to recommend some one for t vacant office. Having ascertained th the expectations which the Board Directors had formed with reference the suitability of Mr. Cartwright h been more than realized, I believed hi a fit person for the office of which he been discharging the duties; I the fore offered it to him; he accepted it, a was appointed. This gentleman, is plain history of a transaction which to place before the last session of Parl ment, which was challenged there (hear, hear)—about which no pap were asked for, but which is now, on t occasion of the death (within a fe months after his supannuation) of t chaplain, brought forward as a gross, a and indefensible job—on the false sta ment that we had superannuated man who was in perfect health in ord that we might appoint a Ministe brother to his office. There may be su matters, but they are double-vilium grounds of attack if we are to attend it is our right and our duty to defend ourselves in such cases as these are. (Loud cheers.) I am sure fitting to make public the facts in this case, a that we have acted with propriety. I w have demanded what they had a right to demand, and they have not and make them public at a convenient possibl moment after the fact, and be thrown broadcast over the fence."

MR. LAURIER'S DEFEAT

BRIEFLY AND CRITICALLY.

(Montreal Witness.)

All the Opposition journals are jubilant at the defeat of and rebuke to the Government. If this defeat has been brought about by the means alleged, it a defeat of the Government which w cost the opposition more than a victor. Every one would have looked upon t re-election of Mr. Laurier as quite natu al, and it would not have been consider any triumph for the Liberal party. It will be generally considered a disgrace to the Conservative party if they employ corrupt means to defeat him. Human nature is so constituted that there is son sympathy with those who adopt the principle of fighting the devil with fire. Corrupt opposition to Mr. Cauchon would more leniently regarded than the sun influences against Mr. Laurier, for in t latter case there would be no fear of suc means being used by him. Those wh know Mr. Laurier, Conservative as w as Liberal, will recognize what he is st ted to have said, that he would rather defeated than be elected by one net wh might stain his reputation and his polit cal career, as quite fitting from his lip and in keeping with his whole characte. TIT FOR TAT.

From all quarters of the Opposition press, big and little, comes a storm of abuse against the Honorable Minister of Finance. This indeed is nothing new. For the last four years the stream of virulence has been pretty steadily flowing in that direction, and the imagination of the scribblers in the employ of the Opposition, must be pretey well exhausted in coining new epithets of vituperation for Mr. CARTWRIGHT's benefit.

What right have these people to complain, we would like to know?

Granted, that Mr. CARTWRIGHT has been severe upon Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, who in Heaven's name had a better right to be?

Has not Sir JOHN for the last eighteen months and more, given Mr. CARTWRIGHT every provocation that one man could well give another?

Has he not again and again publicly stated that Mr. Cartwright was actuated by the vilest and most sordid motives in withdrawing his support?

Has he not repeatedly described, Mr. Cartwright as a "Rotten Stick,"

"A Bungler,"

"A Traitor,"

"An Apostate,"

"A Fool,"

"No Gentleman,"

As "a man who sold his constituency,

"Sold himself,"

"Sold his family honor," and who even (horresco referens.)

as the weaknesses, follies and crimes of their leader, one after another, were disclosed and dissected by the speaker with unerring skill.

He ably exposed the hypocrisy and hollowness of the professions of those who like one confre of the Standard, while professing to be the advocates of morality and temperance can yet lend their influence, and give their support to a man so lost to all sense of shame as Sir JOHN has frequently shown himself to be.

What can be more disgraceful to the good name of Canada, than for a man who has been her Premier, to make the disgraceful exhibition of himself, Sir JOHN has done at some of his meetings lately, notably at Whitby and St. Thomas, and in fact, nothing shows more forcibly the depths of the degradation into which a once great party has fallen, than the maintenance as the leader of that party, of the hero of the Pacific Scandal.

Does the Standard believe that the honorable, respectable Conservatives of Lennox will accept as their leader such a man; that they will follow a man who does not dare to go to England to be sworn in as a member of the Privy Council?

Did the Standard believe that the temperance men of Lennox will be trailed in the mire after a man whose whole life and actions are a protest against the principles they profess, who scoffs at temperance and teetotalers?

Does our religious and moral contemporary believe that the electors of Lennox are to be hoodwinked in this manner? If it does, men were never so mistaken before.

The three meetings held by Mr. CARTWRIGHT at Odessa, Bath, and Nanapanee, and attended, as they were by large audiences, all give evidence that he has not lost his hold upon the affections of the people of Lennox, that his able administration of the important department of Finance, his honest, upright character, being as it is in such striking contrast with that of his opponents and their Chief, and his able defense of himself have strengthened, not weakened, the confidence they have reposed in him for nearly fifteen years.

Read the full and truthful report of the Odessa speech on our first page and compare it with the version in last week's Standard. Comment is unnecessary.

The Toronto Mail of Saturday quotes the Nanapanee Standard's report of Mr. CARTWRIGHT's Odessa speech, and credits the EXPRESS with the same—a typographical error we suppose, yet it should be corrected, as we have no desire to be held accountable for the notoriously garbled statement of our contemporary—the "heavy man" of the Standard.

Our Tory friends who have for the last week been so wonderfully exercised over finding a constituency for Mr. LAURIER will no doubt be pleased to learn that he has not been obliged, a la CARTWRIGHT, to seek the favor in the wilds of the Northwest at the hands of a few half-breeds, but that he has definitely accepted the nomination for Quebec East, Hon. Mr. THIBEAUDAN having vacated the seat in his favor.

POLITICAL CLIPS.

Mr. Cartwright told a very good story in his recent Ayler speech. Said he: "Sir John Macdonald is very fond of telling you that one of the reasons I could not agree with him was because I was a Tory of the Tories—a fossil Tory—because I was, as he said, in another place, a pre-Adamite Tory; though what that may mean is only known to himself. There may be some crumb of comfort to me in that case; for, as a clerical relative of mine once observed to me, 'Take comfort, Brother Richard, for if you were a pre-Adamite Tory, you were a Tory before the fall.'"

JOHN A. MACDONALD QUESTION.

A New Regulation.

When Mr. Mackenzie took office he inaugurated a new era for the majority of the civil servants in Ottawa. He found the Departments crowded with clerks who most of the time had naught else to do than nibble at the ends of their canes as they promenade the streets, or waste their time by loafing in the offices, and swearing at the hours for passing slowly. Being a man of work himself, Mr. Mackenzie determined he would have no sluggards about the buildings. Therefore those who were to lazy or proud to work and those for whom there was nothing to do were sent about their business, or rather about the employment they liked so well—of being indolent to the very best of their ability, which in Sir John's time had had amazing opportunities for development. For those who were willing to be of use and for whom duties could be found, a new regulation was issued requiring them to be prompt in attending their offices and paying attention to their business. This created great discontent, and straightway the Ministers became unpopular with the young gentlemen who labored under the pleasing delusion that as the country owed them a living there should be no restrictions as to the method of getting it. They cried that never were civil servants treated so badly, but we have a case in point. As will be seen by our American despatches, the United States Secretary of War has issued an order forbidding the employees of his department to partake of any spirituous liquors during office hours on pain of dismissal. How would our friends at Ottawa like to have Mr. Mackenzie followed the example set by Secretary McCrary? They would not like it all. We venture to say that after all the clerks at Ottawa are treated with quite as much justice and as much consideration as they are elsewhere.—Times.

It is no new thing for Sir John to be caught fibbing. If frequency to act in that direction constituted a claim to distinction, then the championship must go to the Tory leader by a large majority. ANOTHER SLANDER SLAIN.

MR. BLAKE'S SUPERANNUATION OF THE LATE CHAPLAIN OF THE PENITENTIARY—THE CASE EFFECTUALLY DISPOSED OF.

At Teeswater Mr. Blake took occasion to deal with a slander that had been started for the purpose of injuring him. He said:—As I have mentioned the word superannuation, I take the opportunity to advert to a charge lately made by one of the leaders of the Opposition with reference to a superannuation which took place in my office—that of the late chaplain of the Kingston Penitentiary: Mr. Mulkins, who is said to have been superannuated in order that he might marry, and that a place might be found for Rev. Mr. Cartwright, a brother of the Finance Minister. It was said with equal wit and delicacy that, having become too ill to act as chaplain, he took the opportunity of marrying, and that having nothing better to do, he had since died; whereas if he had remained in the office he would have been still doing his duty as chaplain. With Mr. Mulkins' private affairs I am not so well acquainted as the speaker, but I am told that he had been married some six years before his retirement. He was nearly 65 years old, and had served 25 years when superannuated. His health had been impaired for some years owing chiefly to typhoid fever, which he had contracted while visiting prisoners, and to repeated attacks of which he was yearly subjected from the slightest causes. He submitted some years ago that it was not fair under these circumstances that he should be forced to continue in his office at the peril of these attacks, after his health had already been impaired, and his constitution undermined by their recurrence; and he applied for leave of absence, which was granted on condition of his employing a substitute approved by the Board of Penitentiary Directors. The Board reported to the Minister that Mr. Mulkins had nominated the Rev. C. E. Cartwright, which arrangement was satisfactory to them, they having ascertained from the Warden that Mr. Cartwright was a clergyman in good standing, and well qualified to discharge the duties of chaplain to the Penitentiary. In the course of the inquiries prior to that transaction, Dr. Lavell, the Penitentiary surgeon, certified that Mr. Mulkins had had repeated attacks of typhoid fever within the present six of seven years; and that he was subject to relapses from the slightest causes. The Rev. Mr. Dodds, a respectable clergyman, also gave a certificate to the same effect. Mr. Mulkins went abroad for sometime (Mr. Cartwright discharging his duties, as chaplain), and on his return in June, 1875, he brought a certificate from his English physician that he had treated him from an act of bronchitis, attended with severe congestion of the lungs, and that he considered it essential that Mr. Mulkins should have absolute rest, and that he should resort to a warmer climate. He applied to be relieved from his duties; but he also applied for the addition to his allowance of some years of service, which it was in the power of the Government to grant. I refused that addition, but I thought it my duty, under the circumstances I have mentioned, and having formed the opinion that the duties of chaplain could not be efficiently discharged by Mr. Mulkins, to agree to his superannuation. I recommended that act; I am responsible for it, and I am quite prepared to defend it. After the superannuation of Mr. Mulkins, it became my duty to recommend some one for the vacant office. Having ascertained that the expectations which the Board of Directors had formed with reference to the suitability of Mr. Cartwright had been more than realized, I believed him a fit person for the office of which he had been discharging the duties, and I therefore offered it to him; he accepted it, and was appointed. Some Facts for Farmers."

Under the above heading the Mail of Saturday has an article striving to show farmers how they suffer loss through the operations of the present tariff, realizing, as it does, that unless they can get the farmers to join with them in their efforts for protection they will be of no avail. As we have mentioned previously, the political editor of the Mail makes one statement and the commercial editor another, thereby convicting itself as being a false sheet. In the issue of 27th it says: "When oats are brought down below thirty cents a bushel when barley is nearly unsaleable at fifty cents a bushel, now owing to other causes than the incompetency and stubborn blindness of our self-styled Reform administration, it is time for the farmers to study their true interest."

The Toronto quotations of the same issue for barley were 40 to 66 cents, and it says the greater portion were bought at 55 to 60, and it also said that oats were wanted at 35 to 36. Peas were quoted at 68 to 70 cents, and other produce at an equally high price. If that paper expects its editorials to be believed, with such contrary statements in another page, it must have a low estimate of the memory of its readers.—Exchange.

An Outside View.

(From the N. Y. World.)

Sir John A. Macdonald, ex-Premier of the Dominion, is a shrewd man. When, in 1873, the downfall of his Administration became imminent, and the nasty disclosures about the Pacific Railroad scandal made it certain that the Conservatives would not regain power again for many years, he and his friends set to work to pack all the partisans of whom they desired to take care into the civil service, and to increase the salaries of those already there. When every one was thus provided for for life the Ministry resigned. How effectually it had done its work appears from the following table of appointments and increases of salary made during ten months of 1873, most of them made during the months of September and October and announced in a mammoth Canada Gazette.

New offices created.....	629	Salaries.....	$322,943
Salaries raised.....	1381	Increase.....	152,351

This did not include vacancies occurring and filled up in the ordinary course. How delightful a revenge just before delivering up office to loot the Treasury, pension off all the workers for life and saddle the incoming Administration with a burden of $475,000 a year.

Canada's Merits Recognized.

The three Melbourne gentlemen, appointed Victoria Commissioners to the Exhibition at Sydney, make pointed and flattering reference to the Canadian exhibits. They are not mere theorists, but are practical men of business, and have taken a business view of the situation. The report is signed by Messrs. Robt. Harper, a prominent dealer in grain and groceries; R. Rome, a leading importing merchant of the firm of Lorimer, Rome & Co., and Jno. K. Smith, one of the largest wool dealers of the colony. A substantial evidence that the efforts made by Canadian houses to place the productive and manufacturing interests of the Dominion worthily before the Australian people is found in the orders that have been received by our merchants for goods, samples of which were exhibited there. We are informed by Mr. James Brown, of Montreal, who accompanied the Hon. Mr. Young, and visited the principal Australian cities, that orders have been already executed, via New York and Boston, for many kinds of Canadian goods, the demand being not yet sufficiently extensive to admit of direct shipments of general cargoes via the St. Lawrence.

Chefket Pasha, at the head of a strong force, is advancing to the relief of Plevna. Osman Pasha's army is amply provisioned and in fine condition. Nowithstanding the Russian progress westward the Turks are confident Plevna will hold out.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 1.—The official return of Russians killed, wounded, and missing from the commencement of hostilities to the 25th October, is 61,942.

A Russian official despatch says the total number of prisoners captured at Dubnik and Telische was 7,000, including two Pashas, 200 officers, and an English Colonel in the Turkish service.

The attack on Telische, simultaneous with the capture of Dubnik, on October 24th, was repulsed with the loss of 10,000. The loss at Dubnik was 1,000. Every brigade and regimental commander was killed or wounded, and nearly all officers of the Guards are personally known at headquarters, the fact has cast a deep gloom over members of the staff. The desultory bombardment of Plevna continues.

A severe attack was made on Monday on the Turkish position. There was fighting along the whole line. After a ten hours' engagement the Turkish centre was driven in and the Turks compelled to retire. Moukhtar Pasha was slightly wounded.

General Kanzeff announces the capture of Daetewan, north-east of Orkanie on Nov. 2. There were seven large and thirty small fortified positions. The Turks left a hundred dead. Our loss was insignificant. We seized a large quantity of supplies.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A Constantinople despatch reports on the authority of Russian prisoners that General Ghouri was wounded and has since died.

Three or four thousand Turks, from the south of the Balkans, attacked the Russians at Mehren south of Elma, Monday. After three hours' fighting the Turks retreated, leaving a hundred dead and many wounded.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

A Berlin correspondent says preparations seem to be making in various quarters with a view to the restoration of peace in the event of a decisive Russian victory at Plevna. England is sounding the Powers as to the practicability of future mediation on the basis of the programme of the late Constantinople Conference.

Count Von Beust, Austria ambassador at London, reports that Lord Derby has informed the foreign ambassador that England so far has had no opportunity of making any proposal with a view to mediation.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 4.—A great effort will be made to finish the war this year. In the event of success Russia will demand the free passage of the strait and the autonomy of Northern Bulgaria under some German prince.

ROMANIA.

There is much discontented in Romania concerning the war. There is hardly a family in Moldavia which has not lost a relative. The full strength of the Roumanian army was sent into the field at the beginning of the war. Some companies now have only one officer. After an engagement nineteen Roumanians threatened to mutiny if further attempts were made to lead them to certain death. The Roumanian Chambers will be convoked at the latest possible date and immediately repropagated. Thus a chance of the Roumanians retiring from the war seems vanished.

Now, suppose we put the oil in against the tea-pot. When the duty on tea was imposed that on coal oil was removed. Putting one over against the other how has the "old woman's" purse been affected by the change? The price of tea has not been appreciably increased, while that of coal oil has been very largely reduced. Light is at least as essential to domestic happiness as drink. And if decided saving has been effected on these two articles of home consumption put together, we have no difficulty or hesitation in pronouncing the "old woman" about whom Sir John betrays such a sick concern as being perfectly satisfied with the Hon. Mr. Cartwright's adjustment of the tariff in her behalf.—Whig.

TWO CLASSES OF TORIES.
At a meeting held in his constituency the other day, Mr. Metcalfe, M. P. for West York, divided Tories into two classes, and this is the way he did it: "There were two sorts of Conservatives. One had met with in his election experience. In his first election he called on an old gentleman, who received him politely, listened to what he had to say, and then, while avowing his personal respect, regretted he could not conscientiously vote for a Reformer. He (Mr. M.) believed the old gentleman was quite sincere, and respected him for his consistency. But he met soon after, in Markum, a Conservative of another sort. The man was perfectly rabid, and when asked if his vote flew into a perfect passion, he declared all Reformers were knaves, thieves, Methodists—(loud laughter)—or thieves, and rascals generally."

A New Regulation.

When Mr. Mackenzie took office he inaugurated a new era for the majority of civil servants in Ottawa. He found the Departments crowded with clerks who most of the time had naught else to do, certain that Mr. Mulkins had had repeated attacks of typhoid fever within the present six of seven years; and that he was subject to relapses from the slightest causes. The Rev. Mr. Dadds, a respectable clergyman, also gave a certificate to the same effect. Mr. Mulkins went abroad for sometime (Mr. Cartwright discharging his duties, as chaplain,) and on his return in June, 1876, he brought a certificate from his English physician that he had treated him from an act of bronchitis, attended with severe congestion of the lungs, and that he considered it essential that Mr. Mulkins should have absolute rest, and that he should resort to a warmer climate. He applied to be relieved from his duties; but he also applied for the addition to his allowance of some years of service, which it was in the power of the Government to grant. I refused that addition, but I thought it my duty, under the circumstances I have mentioned, and having formed the opinion that the duties of chaplain could not be efficiently discharged by Mr. Mulkins, to agree to his superannuation. I recommended that act; I am responsible for it, and I am quite prepared to defend it. After the superannuation of Mr. Mulkins, it became my duty to recommend some one for the vacant office. Having ascertained that the expectations which the Board of Directors had formed with reference to the suitability of Mr. Cartwright had been more than realized, I believed him a fit person for the office of which he had been discharging the duties; I therefore offered it to him; he accepted it, and was appointed. This gentleman, is a plain history of a transaction which took place before the last session of Parliament, which was challenged there—(hear, hear)—about which no papers were asked for, but which is now, on the occasion of the death (within a few months after his superannuation) of the chaplain, brought forward as a gross and indefensible jolt—on the false statement that we had superannuated a man who was in perfect health in order that we might appoint a Minister's brother to his office. There may be small matters, but they are double legitimate grounds of attack if wrong; and if attacked it is our right and our duty to defend ourselves in small things as well as great. (Loud cheers.) It is therefore fitting to make public the facts which, if our members had acted with integrity, they would have demanded where they had a right to demand their superannuation and to make them public at the earliest possible moment after the false statement had been thrown broadcast over the land.

MR LAURIER'S DEFEAT
BIGGERY AND REPUTATION.
(Montreal Witness.)

All the Opposition journals are jubilant at the defeat of and rebuke to the Government. If this defeat has been brought about by the means alleged, it is a defeat of the Government which will cost the opposition more than a victory. Every one would have looked upon the re-election of Mr. Laurier as quite natural, and it would not have been considered any triumph for the Liberal party. Mr. Laurier will be generally considered a disgrace to the Conservative party if they employed corrupt means to defeat him. Human nature is so constituted that there is some sympathy with those who adopt the principle of fighting the devil with fire. Corrupt opposition to Mr. Laurier would be more leniently regarded than the same influences against Mr. Laurier, for in the latter case there would be no fear of such means being used by him. Those who know Mr. Laurier, Conservative as well as Liberal, will recognize what he is stated to have said, that he would rather be defeated than be elected by one act which might stain his reputation and his political career, as quite fitting from his lips, and in keeping with his whole character. The election, it is stated, will be immediately contested, and this should certainly be done. If money and whiskey, with strong priestly influence, even within the law, has been employed to defeat Mr.

This did not include vacancies occurring and filled up in the ordinary course. How delightful a revenge just before delivering up office to loot the Treasury, pension off all the workers for life and saddle the incoming Administration with a burden of $475,000 a year.

Canada's Merits Recognized.

The three Melbourne gentlemen, appointed Victoria Commissioners to the Exhibition at Sydney, make pointed and flattering reference to the Canadian exhibits. They are not mere theorists, but are practical men of business, and have taken a business view of the situation. The report is signed by Messrs. Robt. Harper, a prominent dealer in grain and groceries; R. Rome, a leading importing merchant of the firm of Lorimer, Rome & Co., and Jno. K. Smith, one of the largest wool dealers of the colony. A substantial evidence that the efforts made by Canadian houses to place the productive and manufacturing interests of the Dominion worthily before the Australian people is found in the orders that have been received by our merchants for goods, samples of which were exhibited there. We are informed by Mr. James Brown, of Montreal, who accompanied the Hon. Mr. Young, and visited the principal Australian cities, that orders have been already executed, via New York and Boston, for many lines of Canadian goods, the demand being not yet sufficiently extensive to admit of direct shipments of general cargoes via the St. Lawrence.

EARTHQUAKE.

A VIOLENT SHOCK FELT IN EASTERN ONTARIO, QUEBEC, AND THE EASTERN STATES.

HOUSES SHAKEN, FURNITURE DISPLACED, AND LOCKED DOORS FORCED OPEN.

The citizens of Montreal were frightened out of their beds and some almost out of their wits at 1.54 Saturday morning by the most severe shock of earthquake that the oldest people remember to have been felt here. It was preceded by a rumbling noise something like that by a train of cars passing over a bridge. The shock was from the northwest, and it began with only a slight vibration, but increased until buildings shook with an intensity that caused inside doors which were well fastened to fly open. Glass and chinaware on shelves were thrown down and machinery was set in motion. The people in St. Lawrence Hall and the Ottawa Hotel thought the walls and roof were coming down, and for a moment the ladies were panic-stricken. In the northern parts of the city, close to the Mountain, the shock was more severe than in the lower parts. In the poorer localities, especially among the French-Canadian population in the East End, the consternation and terror were very great. Many rushed out in their night-clothes, thinking the houses were tumbling about their ears. The fears of these superstitious people were intensified by their recollection of a tradition that exists here that a celebrated monk, who lived in the seventeenth century, prophesied that the Island of Montreal would be swallowed up in an earthquake in the nineteenth century. The night was fine, clear and cold, and no atmospheric change took place before or after the earthquake, except that it left the air strongly impregnated with electricity and sulphurous vapor. In an experience of ten years in California the writer experienced only one shock there equal to that of this morning. Reports by telegraph say that it extended to St. Albans on the east and Cobourg in the west, but in a very mild form. No damage or loss of life is so peace in the event of a decisive Australian victory at Plevna. England is sending the Powers as to the practicability of future mediation on the basis of the programme of the late Constantinople Conference.

Count Von Beust, Austrian ambassador at London, reports that Lord Derby has informed the foreign ambassador that England so far has had no opportunity of making any proposal with a view to mediation.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 4.—A great effort will be made to finish the war this year. In the event of success Russia will demand the free passage of the straits and the autonomy of Northern Bulgaria under some German prince.

ROUMANIA.
There is much discontent in Roumania concerning the war. There is hardly a family in Moldavia which has not lost a relative. The full strength of the Roumanian army was sent into the field at the beginning of the war. Some companies now have only one officer. As there are no reserve officers to replace the killed the army is disorganized. After an engagement nineteen Roumanians threatened to mutiny if further attempts were made to lead them to certain death. The Roumanian Chambers will be convoked at the latest possible day and immediately prorogued. Thus all chance of the Roumanians retiring from the war seems vanished.

Help for the Rine Movement.

The Montreal Witness says: "Nothing is more remarkable than the way this extraordinary movement lays hold of a community, and both brings to fruition the long labors of the temperance workers therein and reaches out to many whom the regular temperance organization never reached, working in very many what appeared to be permanent results. The evidence of the permanence of many of the reforms effected in other cities appear to be neither few nor insignificant. Another remarkable thing is the frank generosity with which Mr. Rine throws himself on the community, asking no fee or reward but what may be contributed voluntarily, only desiring to take responsibility for local expenses. It is only fair that the public should meet these expenses and give him something as well."

A BARGAIN.

Considerable pother was made at the time and has been since the last small litional duty was put upon tea. Tory mpers, and particularly the chieftain, seized every opportunity of manufacturing "old woman" indignation against the Government on the tea-pot. Now, suppose we put the oil-against the tea-pot. When the duty tea was imposed that on coal oil was added. Putting one over against the other how has the "old woman's" purse been affected by the change? A New Regulation.

When Mr. Mackenzie took office he inaugurated a new era for the majority of civil servants in Ottawa. He found Departments crowded with clerks, most of the time had naught else to do than nibble at the ends of their canes, promenade the streets, or waste time by loafing in the offices and idling at the hours for passing so slowly a man of work himself, Mr. Mackenzie determined he would have no regard about the buildings. There those who were to lazy or proud to do, and those for whom there was nothing to do were sent about their business, rather about the employment they bestowed—of being indolent to the very core of their ability, which in Sir John's had had amazing opportunities for development. For those who were willing to be of use and for whom duties had to be found, a new regulation issued requiring them to be prompt in attending their offices and paying attention to their business. This created great discontent, and straightway the Ministers became unpopular with the young gentlemen who labored under the pleasing notion that as the country owed them nothing there should be no restrictions as to method of getting it. They cried never were civil servants treated so, but we have a case in point. As seen by our American despatches, the United States Secretary of War has issued an order forbidding the employees in department to partake of any intoxicating liquors during office hours on pain of dismissal. How would our friends in Ottawa like to have Mr. Mackenzie wed the example set by Secretary War? They would not like it at all. To venture to say that after all the clerks in Ottawa are treated with quite as much respect and as much consideration as they are elsewhere.—Times.

Mr. N. B. is to have the electric alarm, and in the burnt district streets will be built.

MR. LAURIER'S DEFEAT

BRIBERY AND REPUTATION.

(Montreal, 21st March.)

All the Opposition journals are jubilant at the defeat of and rebuke to the Government. If this defeat has been brought about by the means alleged, it is a defeat of the Government which will cost the opposition more than a victory. Every one would have looked upon the re-election of Mr. Laurier as quite natural, and it would not have been considered any triumph for the Liberal party. It will be generally considered a disgrace to the Conservative party if they employed corrupt means to defeat him. Human nature is so constituted that there is some sympathy with those who adopt the principle of fighting the devil with fire. Corrupt opposition to Mr. Cauchon would be more leniently regarded than the same influences against Mr. Laurier, for in the latter case there would be no fear of such means being used by him. Those who know Mr. Laurier, Conservative as well as Liberal, will recognize what he is stated to have said, that he would rather be defeated than be elected by one act which might stain his reputation and his political career, as quite fitting from his lips, and in keeping with his whole character. The election, it is stated, will be immediately contested, and this should certainly be done. If money and whiskey, with strong priestly influence, even within the law, has been employed to defeat Mr. Laurier, the public has the fullest right to know it, and will not be disposed to deal leniently with those responsible in the matter. The possession of the seat in the House of Commons for one session is a minor matter in comparison with the exposure of the means which it is alleged have been used to gain success. As for Mr. Laurier, it is not probable that he will long be in want of a seat. We cannot credit a statement that he said he would retire from public life if defeated in the late contest. We are convinced that he has a better appreciation of his duty to himself and to his country than that. Many are looking forward to his career with hope of great benefit from it to the country. His more active and influential participation in public affairs, it is confidently anticipated, will strengthen the hands of those, both Liberal and Conservative, who are earnestly working for a higher and purer political life in Canada.

An attempt is being made in Montreal to organize a Canadian National Society, adopting such a platform of principles as may be approved by the members. It is proposed that the Society shall be essentially Canadian, comprehending all creeds and origins desirous of building up a nationality. About seventy leading citizens, of all creeds and nationalities, have joined the movement.

More Facts for Farmers.

For the above heading the Mail of day last has an article striving to farmers how they suffer loss through variations of the present tariff, realizing it does, that unless they can get farmers to join with them in their efforts for protection they will be of no use.

As we have mentioned previously, political editor of the Mail makes one point and the commercial editor, thereby convicting itself as being so. In the issue of 27th it is brought down below thirty cents, when barley is nearly unsaleable at such a price, now owing to other causes the incompetency and stubborn blindness of the Reform administration, it is time for farmers to study their true interest.

Some quotations of the same for barley were 40 to 66 cents, and the greater portion were bought to 80, and it also said that oats were sold at 35 to 36. Peas were quoted to 70 cents, and other produce at unusually high price. If that paper exists, its editorials to be believed, with contrary statements in another page, must have a low estimate of the ory of its readers.—Exchange.

An Outside View.

(From the N. Y. World.)

John A. Macdonald, ex-Premier of Dominion, is a shrewd man. When, 73, the downfall of his Administration became imminent, and the nasty surmises about the Pacific Railroad made it certain that the Conservatives would not regain power again for years, he and his friends set to work to pack all the partisans of whom desired to take care into the civil service, and to increase the salaries of already there. When every one has provided for his life the Minister resigned. How effectually it had its work appears from the following of appointments and increases of made during ten months of 1873, of them made during the months of mber and October and announced in the Canada Gazette.

Chefket Pasha, at the head of a strong force, is advancing to the relief of Plevna. Osman Pasha's army is amply provisioned and in fine condition. Notwithstanding the Russian progress westward the Turks are confident Plevna will hold out.

THE RUSSIAN POSITION.

St. PETERSBURG, Nov. 1.—The official return of Russians killed, wounded, and missing from the commencement of hostilities to the 25th October, is 61,942.

A Russian official despatch says the total number of prisoners captured at Dubnik and Telische was 7,000, including two Pashas, 200 officers, and an English Colonel in the Turkish service.

The attack on Telische, simultaneously with the capture of Dubnik, on October 24th, was repulsed with the loss of one thousand. The loss at Dubnik was 3,000. Every brigade and regimental commander was killed or wounded, and as nearly all officers of the Guards are personally known at headquarters, the fact has cast a deep gloom over members of the staff. The desultory bombardment of Plevna continues.

A severe attack was made on Monday on the Turkish position. There was fighting along the whole line. After a ten hours engagement the Turkish centre was driven in and the Turks compelled to retire. Monkhitar Pasha was slightly wounded.

"General Kanzeff announces the capture of Daetewan, north-east of Orchanie on Nov. 2. There were seven large and thirty small fortified positions. The Turks left a hundred dead. Our loss was insignificant. We seized a large quantity of supplies.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—A Constantinople despatch reports on the authority of Russian prisoners that General Ghourok was wounded and has since died.

Three or four thousand Turks, from the south of the Balkans, attacked the Russians at Mehreen south of Elma, on Monday. After three hours fighting the Turks retreated, leaving a hundred dead and many wounded.

PEACE PROSPECTS.

A Berlin correspondent says preparations seem to be making in various quarters with a view to the restoration of peace in the event of a decisive Russian victory at Plevna. England is sounding the Powers as to the practicability of future mediation on the basis of the programme of the late Constantinople Conference.

Count Von Beust, Austraila ambassador at London, reports that Lord Derby has informed the foreign ambassador that England so far has had no opportunity of making any proposal with a view to mediation.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Nov. 4.—A great effort will be made to finish the war this year. In the event of success Russia will demand the free passage of the straits and the autonomy of Northern Bulgaria under some German prince.
ROMANIA.
 There is much discontented in Roumania concerning the war. There is hardly a family in Moldavia which has not lost a relative. The full strength of the Roumanian army was sent into the field at the beginning of the war. Some companies now have only one officer. As there are no reserve officers to replace the killed the army is disorganized. After an engagement nineteen Roumanians threatened to mutiny if further attempts were made to lead them to certain death. The Roumanian Chambers will be convoked at the latest possible day and immediately repropagued. Thus all chance of the Roumanians retiring from the war seems vanished.

Help for the Rine Movement.

The Montreal Witness says: Nothing is more remarkable than the way this extraordinary movement lays hold of a community, and both brings to fruit in the long labors of the temperance workers therein and reaches out to many whom the regular temperance organization never reached, working in very many what appeared to be permanent results. The evidence of the permanence of many of the reforms effected in other cities appear to be neither few nor insignificant. Another remarkable thing is the frank generosity with which Mr. Rine throws himself on the community, asking no fee or reward but what may be contributed voluntarily, only declining to take responsibility for local expenses. It is only fair that the public should meet these expenses and give him something as well.

 In the wonderful medicine to which the afflicted are above directed for relief, the discoverer believes he has combined in harmony more of Nature's sovereign curative properties, which God has instilled into the vegetable kingdom for healing the sick, than were ever before combined in one medicine. The evidence of this fact is found in the great variety of most obstinate diseases which it has been found to conquer. In the cure of Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, and the early stages of Consumption, it has astonished the medical faculty, and eminent physicians pronounce it the greatest medical discovery of the age. While it cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By its great and thorough blood-purifying properties, it cures all Humors, from the worst Scurfies to a common Blotch, Pimple, or Eruption. Mercurial disease, Mineral Poisons, and their effects, are eradicated, and vigorous health and a sound constitution established. Frydriks, salt-rheum, Fever Sores, Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all the numerous diseases caused by bad blood, are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine.
 If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have a low color of skin, or yellowish brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alternated with hot flushes, low spirits, and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases of "Liver Complaint," only part of the symptoms are experienced. The citizens of Montreal were frightened out of their beds and some almost of their wits at 1.54 Saturday morning by the most severe shock of earthquake that the oldest people remember have been felt here. It was preceded by a rumbling noise something like a train of cars passing over a trestle. The shock was from the north and it began with only a slight vibration, but increased until buildings shook with an intensity that caused many doors which were well fastened to open. Glass and chinaware on shelves were thrown down and machinery was set in motion. The people in the Lawrence Hall and the Ottawa Hotel thought the walls and roof were falling down, and for a moment they were panic-stricken. In the northern parts of the city, close to the mountain, the shock was more severe than in the lower parts. In the poorer districts, especially among the French-Canadian population in the East End, consternation and terror were very great. Many rushed out in their nightgowns, thinking the houses were tumbling about their ears. The fears of these superstitious people were intensified by their recollection of a tradition that is here that a celebrated monk, who lived in the seventeenth century, predicted that the Island of Montreal would be swallowed up in an earthquake in the nineteenth century. The night was fine, clear and cold, and no atmospheric change took place before or after the earthquake, except that it left the air strongly impregnated with electricity and sulphurous vapor. In an experience of ten years in California a writer experienced only one shock equal to that of this morning. Reports by telegraph say that it extended to St. Albans on the east and to the west, but in a very mild form. No damage or loss of life is reported.

Every town in Eastern Canada and Eastern States experienced a shock similar to the above. It was very severe in the Ottawa Valley.

This Cut Illustrates the Manner of Using

This instrument is especially designed for the perfect application of

DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

It is the only form of instrument yet invented with which fluid medicine can be carried high up and perfectly applied to all parts of the affected nasal passages, and the chambers or cavities communicating therewith, in which sores and ulcers frequently exist, and from which the catarrhal discharge generally proceeds. The want of success in treating Catarrh heretofore has arisen largely from the impossibility of applying remedies to these cavities and chambers by any of the ordinary methods. This obstacle in the way of effecting cures is entirely overcome by the invention of the Douche. Its use is pleasant and so simple that a child can understand it. Full and explicit directions accompany each instrument. When used with this instrument, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures recent attacks of "Cold in the Head" by a few applications.

CATARRH

SYMPTOMS.-Frequent headache, discharge falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, thick, mucous, purulent, offensive, etc. In others, a dryness, dry, watery, weak, or inflamed eyes, stopping up, or obstruction, of nasal passages, itching in ears, deafness, hawking and coughing to clear throat, ulcerations, scabs from ulcers, voice altered, nasal twang, offensive breath, impaired or total deprivation of sense of smell and taste, dizziness, mental depression, loss of appetite, indigestion, enlarged tonsils, tickling cough, etc. Only a few of the symptoms are likely to be present in any one case at one time.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, when used with Dr. F. C. SAGE'S Nasal Douche, and taken internally, will effect a permanent cure of Catarrh of the nose, throat, and lungs. It is a perfect specific for the acute and chronic cases. It is mild and pleasant to use, containing no strong or caustic drugs or poisons. The Catarrh Remedy is sold at 50 cents, per bottle, and by all Druggists.

A very sensible shock was felt in Napanee at 2 o'clock on Sunday Morning, but it is no wise materially disturbed the calm slumbers of our citizens. But the mining engineering feat of Mr. R. Advertising Frauds.

It is wonderful how many gullible people there are in the world. Frauds of all kinds appear to flourish, and brains could and should be employed in things useful, are set to work to new means by which their possessions become enriched at the expense of confiding public. There are always a number of people who will not work long as they can make a livelihood by other means. One section of this is engaged in devising schemes by which they can sweep into their coffers the money of those who bite at the bait they offer, while another section take their victims. Those who are these swindlers will, we presume, as long as there are any of the remaining who desire to attain a petence by other means than the old way of honest industry, plus perseverance.

These remarks are suggested by the fact that many newspapers, considered respectable, for the sake of a few dollars, aid swindlers and lottery in their operations by advertising for them. In this country lotteries are illegal newspapers which publish their advertisements are liable to a heavy penalty. We have frequently to refuse such advertisements, and we sometimes wonder any paper which professes to be a champion of the public interests, can be so much engaged in perpetrating such frauds as most of these schemes are. We would like to see our contemporaries a little more careful in this respect.

We observe an advertisement sent in some of our leading journals offering lots of "Romaine gold" for sale for sums of money varying from fifty cents to five dollars. When "Romaine gold" may be well known, but it is probably brass, while the principal stock-in-trade of those dealing in such wares. To those who for a moment to consider, it is apparent that on the true principle of trade it is out of the question for one to give such quantities of goods for a small sum; and though those who in them profess to be very benevolent their liberality has not reached a point that they are prepared to away their goods to strangers without making a fair living profit on them. Yet we have no doubt hundreds of persons reply to these advertisements find out, when it is too late, that they buy they have also been sold.

Another common swindle is that as "puts and calls," advertised by sponable brokers, who generally a name similar in sound to that of responsible firm. By representing a "sure thing," many who know nothing whatever about stocks are induced, and afterwards find out to sorrow that the only one who "sure thing" is the fellow who has possession of their money which never see again.

We would caution our readers against having anything to do with these deals, which under all sorts of disguises, are so freely advertised. Buyer as well as seller, remember that "honesty is the best policy."—Journal of Commerce.

"The Ottawa Free Press" is now publishing an early morning edition, receiving European and American despatches, and Canadian special telegrams, simultaneously with the Globe and Mail. The Free Press gives Ottawa district news twelve hours in advance of Toronto, and nine hours in advance of Montreal papers. Such enterprise is really commendable and appreciable.

Why is Spencer always busy even in hard times?

The Rev. Dr. Hartung's Lectures.

Last Sunday the lecture in the E. M. Church, on "Patriot Loyalty" was well attended. The next lecture on Sunday evening subject "The Tongue" will doubtless prove a success. The Doctor is quite an original. In his way, he is apt in his diction, his remarks have a certain pungency, with a sprinkling of wholesome wit, his home thrusts are capital and to the point, and although they may hit hard, yet they certainly cannot offend. We are glad to see that the Doctor is so well appreciated.

Potter Bros

The wants of the travelling public are carefully looked after by Messrs. Potter Bros., of the Balise House. The Mail Stage Line between this place and Picton will receive extra attention during the coming winter. A new conveyance with seating capacity for twenty or more, has been built by Mr. N. German of Napanea, and it is a model of strength and neatness. It is tastefully painted and lettered by Mr. Fred Richardson sr., whose name is a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the artistic portion of the work. From their efforts to please, the Messrs. Potter are certainly entitled to the patronage we hope is in store for them.

Anniversary and Tea.

The anniversary services of the M. L. Church, North Fredericksburgh, will take place D. V., Nov. 11th and 12th. Sermons on Sabbath as follows:—10:30 a. m. and 7 p. m., by the Rev. C. S. Eastman, of Picton; at 2:30 by the Rev. A. Shorts, of Mill Point. Collections at the close of each service. Tea on Monday the 12th in grand style. Addresses by the above Rev. gentlemen and others. Plenty of first-class music, vocal and instrumental. Tea served at 6 p. m. All for 35 cents.

Why does Spencer do the largest trade is because he keeps the largest stock; keeps first-class goods on hand; and makes up his clothing, puts in the best of trimmings, and turns out the best fits and most stylish clothing. Reason to deliver a lecture on the above subject in St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church on next Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Admission free. A Collection will be taken up. All are cordially invited to attend.

Athletic Sports.

To-day (Friday,) the school pupils will exhibit their extraordinary muscular development and activity on the grounds of the East Ward Academy. Running, jumping, putting heavy weights, balancing, tumbling, &c., will fill the day's programme, commencing at 2:45 p. m.; several valuable prizes will be competed for. In the evening at the Town Hall, music, readings, calisthenics and Indian club exercises. Admission to the Hall 15cts. Commence at 8.

Illegal Whiskey.

The much-adjourned case of D. W. Fralick was settled on Tuesday before Messrs. James and Herring. Mr. Fralick was accused of allowing parties to leave a bottle and 25 cents in his blacksmith shop. In about ten minutes the bottle would be magically filled with "old rye" and the 25 cents would as magically disappear. This "hocus focus" was thought to be "too thin" and Mr. Fralick was fined $3.00 and $9.70 costs. Mr. Reeve for the prosecution, Mr. Madden for the defence.

The Fifth of November.

We were treated to a gunpowder explosion on Monday that would have astonished our Guy Fawkes. In sinking a well in the rear of Mr. Jno. Herring's new building on Bridge Street, the solid rock was bored to a depth of 16 feet. Two and a half pounds of blasting powder was inserted, which, after being well packed and rammed down, was fired. The concussion was terrific. The shock was felt for half a mile. About fifty pieces of rock came down in a shower cutting through the tin roof of Mr. Herring's building, but otherwise doing little damage.

I have contracted debts and must and will pay them. Customers have made debts with me and must pay them, and that at once. I have waited patiently through October and now I must have the money. If not paid in a very few days, my books will go into the hands of a lawyer for collection. Don't blame me if costs are made on every over an account. Please settle at once and oblige. HENRY R. SEXTON.

MR. WALTER ON THE UNITED STATES.

THE PROPRIETOR OF THE LONDON TIMES ON THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM.

At the meeting of the Royal East Berks Agricultural Association, held Oct. 10, in reply to the toast, "The health of the President of the Association," Mr. Walter, M. P., who was in the chair, said: "Last year, when in the nature of things it would have been his lot to be Vice-President, the intense interest he took in the American Exhibition, and his desire to revisit a country where he had been treated with much hospitality, induced him to cross the Atlantic, and that day twelve months he was at Niagara. Now, if there was a lesson in public affairs which he had learned in America, and which Englishmen who went there might be expected to learn, it was an intense conviction of the evils arising from the system of Protection and from an inflated currency. He found the Americans generally, as compared with their position ten years ago, in a state of great depression. The only classes that were prospering in Canada and the United States were the farmers and the laborers. Everywhere he heard of their prosperity. Now, these two classes had no protection whatever. But all the others were in deep depression, and that in spite of a most stringent and severe protective system. The inflated currency was a twin curse with the protective system, or, at all events, was generally found in connection with it. Well, he found that owing to that system, in a great measure, there had been an enormous inflation of home industry, as it was called. Mills and manufactures which had sprung up under the system had stopped, and the large towns were swarming with unemployed people, a large number of whom were actually endeavoring to make their way back to England. In America, he was sorry to say, Adam Smith's book was as little read as they were told the Bible was in Spain, and he was afraid it would be a long time before public feeling in that country would turn round in favor of Free Trade. There was so much ignorance and selfishness mixed up with the question, so many people's interests, it was thought, were kept up by the present system, that until another Cobden arose, or until Protection could no longer stand in the face of the evidence against it, we had no chance of penetrating that armor of protection in which the Americans had enveloped themselves. But his belief was that if they could only be persuaded to give up those doctrines and adopt something like free trade, both their country and our own would experience the greatest possible benefit. We ourselves sustained great injury from the American protective system, but it was nothing in comparison with what they unconsciously inflicted upon themselves. A return to cash payments was also much to be desired. The time, he hoped and believed, was quickly approaching when the Americans would see the error of having their trade inflated by that mismaking a fair living profit on the. Yet we have no doubt hundreds of sons reply to these advertisements, find out, when it is too late, that they buy there have also been sold.

Another common swindle is that known as "puts and calls," advertised by irresponsible brokers, who generally assume a name similar in sound to that of some responsible firm. By representing it as a "sure thing," many who know not whatever about stocks are induced to invest, and afterwards find out to their sorrow that the only one who has a "sure thing" is the fellow who has possession of their money which it never see again.

We would caution our readers against having anything to do with these schemes, which under all sorts of disguises, are so freely advertised no days.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

FRESH TIDINGS OF THE FATE HIS EXPEDITION.

SOME RECORDS SAID TO HAVE BEEN BY THE NATIVES.

Thomas Barrett, of the whaling boat Houghton, lost in Hudson's bay J. 1870, arrived in New York on the ult. with a silver spoon bearing Sir Franklin's crest, which he obtained an Esquimaux Indian. The latter Barrett said the ship from which spoon was obtained was crushed by at an island near Cape Hallawell, that the natives took the crew to Cane Englefield, and kept them until and nine hours in advance of Montreal papers. Such enterprise is really commendable and appreciated."

Why is Spencer always busy even in hard times?

The Rev. Dr. Hartley's Lectures

Last Sunday the lecture in the E. M. Church, on "Fruit Leaves" was well attended. The next lecture on Sunday evening said to be "The Tongue" will doubtless prove a success. Why Spencer does the largest trade is because he keeps the largest stock; keeps first-class hands re-appropriating to make up his clothing, puts in the best of trimmings, and turns out the best fits and most stylish clothing. Reason enough.

The Barley Market

During the past eight days, says the Oswego Times of October 28, the sales of Canadian barley in this market have reached over 650,000 bushels. The market has in fact been more active than for any corresponding period. It is well known that Oswego is the principal outlet for Canadian barley, where most of the buyers look for their supplies. The inauguration of barley inspection at this port has been of much convenience and benefit to both buyers and sellers, as buyers now can order their supplies from the different grades. Under the old system barley was sold by sample.

Public Opinion.—A business man says to me the other day your stock is too large for these hard times. I reply, customers go where they find the largest stock to choose from. I keep the largest stock and best goods, consequently I do the largest clothing trade in the County, and it is so.

H. R. SPENCER.

Another Fire.

About 1 o'clock on Saturday morning a storey-and-a-half wooden building owned and occupied by Mr. Ruben Baker, situated over the river on the east side of the Fredericksburgh road, was destroyed by fire. The direction of the wind, which was from the west, was favorable, but had it been from the opposite direction, several wooden buildings in the immediate vicinity would probably have been destroyed. The engine was not used, as no danger was to be apprehended, and it could not have been taken to the locality and got into working order in time to be of any service. Household goods mostly saved. Insurance $300.

I never spare expense in getting up the best and most stylish clothing, and the public know it. Why else do I do the largest trade in clothing?

Death of Chief-Justice Draper

Hon. William Henry Draper, C. B., Chief Justice of the Court of Error and Appeal, died on Friday afternoon, after a lingering illness, at his residence at Hazeldene, Yorkville, in his 77th year. The deceased was born in Surrey, England and was the son of Rev. Henry Draper, D. D., rector of St. Antholin, Walling street, London. In his early youth Mr. Draper was cadet in an East Indian man. He emigrated to Canada in 1820, and studied law in Port Hope. He was called to the Bar in 1828 and practised in Toronto. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Upper Canada in 1851 for the County of Russell and was afterwards returned for London. He was a member of the first Government after the union of Quebec and Ontario. He was appointed to the Queen's Bench in June, 1847, and was made Chief Justice of Upper Canada in July 1863, some years later being appointed President of the Court of Error and Appeal. He was made a C. B. in 1864, and was for some time President of the Church Association in Toronto.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

FRESH TIDINGS OF THE FATE OF HIS EXPEDITION.

SOME RECORDS SAID TO HAVE BEEN BURIED BY THE NATIVES.

Thomas Barrett, of the whaling bark Houghton, lost in Hudson's bay Ju 1870, arrived in New York on the 3 ult. with a silver spoon bearing Sir John Franklin's crest, which he obtained from an Esquimaux Indian. The latter told Barrett that the ship from which the spoon was obtained was crushed by an island near Cape Hallawell, and that the natives took the crew to Cape Englefield, and kept them until by one they perished from cold, hunger or disease. Barrett says the natives about his winter quarters at Marble land had two other spoons, one with Franklin crest and the other having "S. S." engraved on it. These were purchased by the United States Consul at John. The Esquimaux say the vessel became a total wreck. Sir John Franklin was with them, and they recognized him as the leader. The white men who died were buried by them. The most important fact they communicated was that this crew of whites left a lot of bones with writing in them, which were buried also at Englefield. This spot is about 900 miles inland, and has not yet been reached by any exploring parties. It is proposed to fit out an expedition from New York in the spring to secure the records.

Dancing was kept up with the greatest enthusiasm and good humor until ten o'clock, when the company separated with God Save the Queen, amid the very hearty congratulations the patients at having been permitted assist as so merry and joyous a festival.—Whig.

GRAIN WAREHOUSE BURNED AT BELLEVILLE.

LOSS OF LIFE.

The Farmers' Warehousing Company's elevator took fire Saturday morning from a spark from a tug and was completely destroyed, with nearly all its contents, which consisted of 38,000 bushels of grain. Of the grain 23,400 bushels belonged to Ketchum Graham, insured for $10,000 in the National; 2,100 bushels was owned by H. Corby, jr., insured fully in the Royal; and 12,000 bushels stored by farmers, uninsured. The building was valued at $6,000, and its loss is covered by a policy in the Liverpool and London and Globe for $12,000 on the whole premises. The total loss is $25,000 to $30,000. Richard Dewsbury, the engineer was burned in the building, he having been in the second story when the fire broke out. The steamer Kineardine, which lay at the elevator aground with a cargo of rye, was saved with great difficulty.

Now, if there was a lesson in public affairs which he had learned in America, and which Englishmen who went there might be expected to learn, it was an intense conviction of the evils arising from the system of Protection and from an inflated currency. He found the Americans generally, as compared with their position ten years ago, in a state of great depression. The only classes that were prospering in Canada and the United States were the farmers and the laborers. Everywhere he heard of their prosperity. Now, these two classes had no protection whatever. But all the others were in deep depression, and that in spite of a most stringent and severe protective system. The inflated currency was a twin curse with the protective system, or, at all events, was generally found in connection with it. Well, he found that owing to that system, in a great measure, there had been an enormous fall of home industry, as it was called. Mills and manufactures which had sprung up under the system had stopped, and the large towns were swarming with unemployed people, a large number of whom were actually endeavoring to make their way back to England. In America, he was sorry to say, Adam Smith's book was as little read as they were told the Bible was in Spain, and he was afraid it would be a long time before public feeling in that country would turn round in favor of Free Trade. There was so much ignorance and selfishness mixed up with the question, so many people's interests, it was thought, were kept up by the present system, that until another Cobden arose, or until Protection could no longer stand in the face of the evidence against it, we had no chance of penetrating that armor of protection in which the Americans had enveloped themselves. But his belief was that if they could only be persuaded to give up those doctrines and adopt something like free trade, both their country and our own would experience the greatest possible benefit. We ourselves sustained great injury from the American protective system, but it was nothing in comparison with what they unconsciously inflicted upon themselves. A return to cash payments was also much to be desired. The time, he hoped and believed, was quickly approaching when the Americans would see the error of having their trade inflated by that miserable system of unsound currency in which nobody knew the value of the paper he held."

Death of Chief-Justice Draper

Hon. William Henry Draper, C. B., Chief Justice of the Court of Error and Appeal, died on Friday afternoon, after a lingering illness, at his residence at Hazeldene, Yorkville, in his 77th year. The deceased was born in Surrey, England and was the son of Rev. Henry Draper, D. D., rector of St. Antholin, Watling street, London. In his early youth Mr. Draper was cadet in an East Indian arm. He emigrated to Canada in 1820, and studied law in Port Hope. He was called to the Bar in 1828 and practised in Toronto. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Upper Canada in 1851 for the County of Russell and was afterwards returned for London. He was a member of the first Government after the union of Quebec and Ontario. He was appointed to the Queen's Bench in June, 1847, and was made Chief Justice of Upper Canada in July 1863, some years later being appointed President of the Court of Error and Appeal. He was made a C. B. in 1864, and was for some time President of the Church Association in Toronto.

Barrett says the natives about his winter quarters at Marble Island had two other spoons, one with the Franklin crest and the other having "S.S.S." engraved on it. These were purchased by the United States Consul at St. John. The Esquimaux say the vessel became a total wreck. Sir John Franklin was with them, and they recognized him as the leader. The white men who died were buried by them. The most important fact they communicated was that this crew of whites left a lot of books with writing in them, which were buried also at Englefield. This spot is about 900 miles inland, and has not yet been reached by any exploring parties. It is proposed to fit out an expedition from New York in the spring to secure those records.

Hallow'een at the Kingston Insane Asylum.

All Hallow Eve will remain a red letter day in the memory of the patients in the Asylum for many a day to come. The kindly Medical Superintendent, Dr. Dickson, gave them a ball and a little festival to celebrate the occasion, which was further enlivened by the presence of MacMillian's Quadrille Band, who very generously volunteered their services, and whose inspiring strains contributed greatly to the spirit and success of the entertainment. Dancing was kept up with the greatest enthusiasm and good humor until ten o'clock, when the company separated with God Save the Queen, and amid the very hearty congratulations of the patients at having been permitted to assist as so merry and joyous a festival. —Whig.

PETTIT'S EYE-SALVE.

An Infallible Remedy for all Diseases of the Eye (acute or chronic), Granulation of the Lids, Ulceration of the Lacrymal Glands, Film, and Weakness of the Vision from any cause.

THE AMERICAN EYE-SALVE is presented to the public with the assurance of its efficiency as a curative of most diseases of the eye, acute or chronic in origin, whether induced by scrofulous origin or otherwise, weakness or defect of vision, diminished tone of the optic nerve, or a diseased state of the tissues constituting that organ. Also, for all persons whose vocation requires an incessant action of the eyes, the Salve will act as a charm in restoring a uniform healthy action, where weakness, pain, and misery may have long threatened a fatal termination. It is the most simple, safe, and effectual remedy ever discovered. The materials of which it is made are pure, perfect, and costly, compounded with elaborate care and exactness, safe in its application, being used externally, and, of course, avoiding the pain and danger which necessarily attends the introduction of caustic minerals and eye-washes. RINGWORM AND OLD CHRONIC SORES, of scrofulous origin, or resulting from whatever cause, yield to the AMERICAN EYE-SALVE. IT IS USED SUCCESSFULLY FOR PILES. Its soothing effect is immediate, and a permanent cure requires but a few applications. The proprietors of "DR. J. PETTIT'S AMERICAN EYE-SALVE," while making new and improved machinery for making a more perfect box for the Eye-Salve, have changed the Trade Mark on the cover so as to correspond with the Cut on the Wrapper, Circulars, Advertisements, etc. We call attention to this, as it might otherwise be regarded as counterfeiting.

that I offer and sell under a POSITIVE GUARANTEE. If a beneficial effect is not experienced by the time two-thirds of the contents of the bottle are used, I will, on return of the bottle, two-thirds of the medicine having been taken according to directions, and the case being one for which I recommend it, promptly refund the money paid for it. Had I not the most perfect confidence in its virtues, I could not offer it as I do under these conditions; but having witnessed its truly miraculous cures in thousands of cases, I feel warranted and perfectly safe in risking both my reputation and my money on its merits.

The following are among those diseases in which my Favorite Prescription has worked cures, as if by magic, and with a certainty never before attained by any medicine: Leucorrhoea, Excessive Flowing, Painful Monthly Periods, Suppressions when from unnatural causes, Irregularities, Weak Back, Protrusion, or falling of the Uterus, Anteversion and Retroversion, Bearing Down Sensations, Internal Heat, Nervous Depression, Debility, Dropsy, Threatened Miscarriage, Chronic Congestion, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Uterus, Impotency, Barrenness, or Sterility, Female Weakness, and very many other chronic diseases incident to woman not mentioned here. In all affections of this nature, my Favorite Prescription works cures—the marvel of the world. This medicine I do not extol as a cure-all, but it admirably fulfills a single purpose of purpose, being a most specific in all chronic diseases of the sexual system of woman. It will not disappoint, nor will it do harm, in any state or condition.

Those who desire further information on these subjects can obtain it in THE PEOPLE'S COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of over 300 pages, sent, post-paid, on receipt of $1.50. It treats minutely of those diseases peculiar to Females, and gives much valuable advice in regard to the management of those affections.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets

Or Sugar-Coated, Concentrated, Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules. THE "LITTLE GIANT" CATHARTIC, or Multum in Parvo Physic.

The novelty of modern Medical, Chemical, and Pharmaceutical Science. No use of any longer taking the large, repulsive, and nauseous pills, composed of cheap, crude, and bulky ingredients, when we can, by a careful application of chemical science, extract all the cathartic and other medicinal properties from the most valuable roots and herbs, and concentrate them into a minute Granule, scarcely larger than a mustard seed, that can be readily swallowed by those of the most sensitive stomachs and fastidious tastes. Each little Purgative Pellet represents, in a most concentrated form, as much cathartic power as is embodied in any of the large pills found for sale in drug-shops. From their wonderful cathartic power, in comparison to their size, people who have not tried them are apt to suppose that they are harsh or drastic in effect; but such is not at all the case, the different active medicinal principles of which they are composed being so harmonized and modified, one by the others, as to produce a most searching and thorough, yet gently and kindly operating, cathartic.

$500 Reward is hereby offered by the proprietor of these Pellets, to any chemist who, upon analysis, will find in them any calomel or other forms of mercury, mineral poison, or injurious drug.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For Jaundice, Headache, Constipation, Impure Blood, Pain in the Shoulders, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations from the Stomach, Bad taste in the mouth, Bilious attacks, Pain in the Region of Kidneys, Internal Fever, Bloated feeling about Stomach, Rush of Blood to Head, High-colored Urine, Unstability and Gloomy Forebodings, take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of my Purgative Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, I wish to say that their action upon the internal economy is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative impress. Age does not impair the properties of these Pellets. They are sugar-coated and enclosed in glass bottles, their virtues being thereby preserved unimpaired for any length of time in any climate, so that they are always fresh and reliable. This is not the case with those pills which are put up in cheap wooden or pasteboard boxes. Recollect that for all diseases where a Laxative, Alterative, or Purgative, is indicated, these little Pellets will give the most perfect satisfaction to all who use them.

classes. If manufacturers are to be protected, why not other classes? why for instance, the farmers after a bad harvest? The community should be taxed for their loss. A large number were being deluded by men, who, when they were in power, made no exertion to protect manufacturers or anybody else, but now pursued the nostrum from one end of the country to the other for political purposes. The position of the Government was clear. If the necessities of the country demanded it, they were prepared to levy a tariff to benefit all classes alike, but would not do so for the sake of gratifying a particular class. In conclusion, after speaking for an hour and three quarters with perfect fluency, he assured the people of Ernestown that he was not going to be dismayed or frightened by the threats of opponents in Lennox. On the other hand, he was sensible of the confidence which its people had reposed in him for fifteen years. Yes, there were those of his friends who thought that another could represent the constituency better than he, he could only repeat what he had said on previous occasions, that he would not only step aside, but assist his successor. He retired, after thanking the electors for the patient hearing.

A FULL ENDORSEMENT.

Mr. H. M. Deroche, M. P. P., for Ad-dington, was called to the platform, and was well received. He said that after the able and eloquent address of the gifted member, it would be out of place for him to make any extended remarks. He was pleased to be there with them, and was not only pleased and edified with the speech, but was reminded that the last occasion of his visit to that hall was on the occasion of the contest between Mr. Cartwright and Mr. Hooper, when the former came for re-election as a Minister. He remembered a somewhat stormy meeting, with considerable anxiety as to the result, but it was decided without any great trouble, the majority of 800 being a credit to Lennox. Their member was then an untitled Minister, but he now came back, after four years, to very soon asked a verdict at their hands. At the last election the opponents of Mr. Mackenzie protested great evils from his Government. Some Conservatives think that these evil forebodings have been realized, but the greater mass of the people believed that the Ministry's course had been a good one. They have not had years of ease. It has been a time when they could not have chosen to seek power. The wave of depression which had swept over the United States had reached the shores of Canada inopportunistically for them. If ever there was a time in the history of this country which required the services of a wise, a courageous and a brave man, in a most important position of the Government to resist importunities and overcome obstacles, that time was when Mr. Cartwright assumed office. He has not only been equal to the situation, but master of it to the country's credit and advantage. Many men of great ability had filled the office of Finance Minister, such men as Rose, Galt, Hincks and Holton, but when the history of this Dominion was written it would be shown that never was the office so brilliantly occupied as by the present incumbent. Few men can realize the difficulties by which he was surrounded when financial depression settled on the country. They had heard the subject of the evening argued out to logical results. No former would deny that the Government policy was the best for the main interests of the country. The interests of 25,000 should not control those of 4,000,000. One man ought not to sway two hundred. The English and French revolutions had proved that protectives and monopolies could never exist in a free country. This protection cry was not only brought forward by a few interested people for the sake of fortunes, but by men of party and their organs for a road back to office. It had no great hold on the masses of the people, nor ever will. It was adopted because they want to mount to power through it.

grabbed the rascal by the throat. "Open that valise, you confounded thief," says I. He got very white about the gills, and began to beg. When the valise was opened, sure enough there was a new bedspread for which I had paid $5. "Bill," says I, "bring me the thief account." I footed it up, and it amounted to just $56. "You pay that," says I, "or go to gaol." He thought it was hard to pay for other men's stealings, but on the whole concluded that it was cheaper than to go to the penitentiary. Compounding a felony? Well, yes, it did have that complexion. But maybe it nipped a thief in the bud. The girls are generally honest, though once in a while we catch one of them. One time there was an infernal tree-peddler stopped with us, and he had a black satin vest stolen. I paid him $5 for it. He described it very accurately. There was a yellow spot on the collar, where he had dropped some acid on it, and his name in full was written on the leather with which it was bound at the bottom. I suspected the girl Mary. We watched her for a week or two, and concluded we were mistaken, when one day a fellow came in with a black satin vest, and there was a round yellow spot on the collar. It was Mary's sweetheart. I collared him, jerked up his vest, and found the name of the tree-peddler on the leather. He owned up that Mary had stolen the vest and given it to him. At that time the thief account was only $7, and so he got off cheap."—Indianapolis Herald.

BY DARWIN.
CHAPTER I.

"MY DAUGHTER, WHY THAT SIGH?"

'Twas a lovely summer morning, in the year 9001 before Christ. The woods of Senegambia were clothed in their fairest costume, the lovely birds were chirping and singing their morning lays; the sky was one vast sheet of blue—everything, in short, was full of sweetness and light, except the lovely Lady Adeliza de Chimpanzee. She was in the dumps. Moodily she rubbed her shoulders against a huge palm-tree, and while performing this act heaved a vast sigh. Just at that moment her mamma dropped from the tree above her. "My daughter," said the Duchess de Chimpanzee, "why that sigh?" "Ah, mamma, look at me," said Lady Adeliza. "See how different I am from the rest of our tribe. See how white I am becoming." "My daughter," said the dutchess, languidly, as she seated herself on a convenient boulder, "you should be proud of the difference. It is a distinction. We are a higher race." "I don't know, mamma. See what little caudal appendages we have. All the other folks can hang from the trees by their tails, but we are compelled to sit on the limbs." "We are advancing, my dear. You are whiter than I am. You can talk in your youth; I could not until middle age. Your grandmother, as you know, can only grunt it. You are moving to a higher sphere." "Well, mamma, none of our folks will marry me," said Lady Adeliza, pouting. "No, my child; it has been decreed that there should be a selection of the

CHAPTER IV.

The seasons changed; summer lapsed into autumn, autumn into winter, winter into spring. Then there was a great rejoicing, for the Lady Adeliza gave the prince an heir. The child, however, was an anomaly in that region. It had no tail; it had flat feet; it had a white skin; it had no hair on its body. All the wise men examined it. It was not an orang-outang; it was not a chimpanzee; evidently it was a new species. Then a family conclave was called. "What shall we call it?" asked everybody. The Duchess de Chimpanzee, who was languidly making mud pies, said, "Let us call it a man."

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum—or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible—Rubber and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, is full of electricity, and when combined with the pure medicinal gums, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the KIDNEYS, BREAST or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive; and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BUST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLD of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-sent Consumption.

the former came for consolation as a minister. He remembered a somewhat stormy meeting, with considerable anxiety as to the result, but it was decided without any great trouble, the majority of 800 being a credit to Lennox. Their member was then an untitled Minister, but he now came back, after four years, to very soon asked a verdict at their hands. At the last election the opponents of Mr. Mackenzie protested great evils from his Government. Some Conservatives think that these evil forebodings have been realized, but the greater mass of the people believed that the Ministry's course had been a good one. They have not had years of ease. It has been a time when they could not have chosen to seek power. The wave of depression which had swept over the United States had reached the shores of Canada inopportunistically for them. If ever there was a time in the history of this country which required the services of a wise, a courageous and a brave man, in a most important position of the Government to resist importunities and overcome obstacles, that time was when Mr. Cartwright assumed office. He has not only been equal to the situation, but master of it to the country's credit and advantage. Many men of great ability had filled the office of Finance Minister, such men as Rose, Galt, Hincks and Holton, but when the history of this Dominion was written it would be shown that that never was the office so brilliantly occupied as by the present incumbent. Few men can realize the difficulties by which he was surrounded when financial depression settled on the country. They had heard the subject of the evening argued out to logical results. No farmer would deny that the Government policy was the best for the main interests of the country. The interests of 25,000 should not control those of 4,000,000. One man ought not to sway two hundred. The English and French revolutions had proved that protectives and monopolies could never exist in a free country. This protection cry was not only brought forward by a few interested people for the sake of fortunes, but by men of party and their organs for a road back to office. It had no great hold on the masses of the people, nor ever will. It was adopted because they want to mount to power through it. They had been longing for four years after the flesh pots. Sir John had, for nearly twenty years, been a political centre, and how much protection had he given more than was enjoyed at the present time? He finds it easier to argue the thing in Opposition than to put it practically in force. Mr. Cartwright had not lost his hold on the people of Ernestown, which first received him when young and unfamed, and which will uphold him now that he has arrived at such an important position in the Government. He expected the County of Lennox, and particularly the township of Ernestown, to roll up for him a larger majority, than ever the Finance Minister had received, at the next general elections.

Mr. Deroche sat down and hearty applause.

THE COZY CUP OF TEA

A gentleman present asked Mr. Cartwright a question, why the Government, which, he (Mr. C.) had said, could not retaliate on the Americans, had retaliated on John Chinaman and his tea?

A PUNGENT ANSWER.

Mr. Cartwright replied that it was evident the speaker had never fully understood the subject. The Government had not retaliated on John Chinaman or any body else; retaliation was a fallacy and a mistake. We did not trade with people to do them good, but for our own good. He said that the reason a tax was put upon tea was that that a revenue had to be raised somehow and a sum could be contributed by the tea consumers much more easily than from other sources.

ANOTHER INTERROGATORY.

Mr. A. L. Morden, of Nanapanee, on behalf of an elector, asked Mr. Cartwright if he could recollect the amount of the national debt at the time of Sir John's advent to and egress from office?

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. Cartwright said he could not remember distinctly in the absence of pub-

"No, my child; it has been decreed that there should be a selection of the fittest in marriage. We have offered you to the Prince d'Orang-Outang, who is even whiter than you are, as his wife."

"Oh, mamma," gasped the Lady Adeliza, "that's splendid! Will he come soon?"

"Restrain yourself. People of high blood and short caudal appendages never get excited. He will be here in a short time."

Lady Adeliza went away to look for acanths, and the dutchess sat on a rock and reflectively scratched her head.

"SHE WAS THE LOVELIEST CREATURE HE HAD EVER SEEN."

CHAPTER II.

The Duke de Chimpanzee was chief of a very large tribe. If he had been in the show business he would have made an everlastig fortune. He had but one daughter, the Lady Adeliza, and as she would inherit the live stock over which he ruled, youths of the neighboring tribes desired to marry her. Her parents, however, desired that she should be, if possible, the fountain of a new race, to which all their traditions told them they were working up. They determined that she should wed the Prince d'Orang-Outang. The Duke proposed the matter to the prince.

"Aw!" said the prince, as he adjusted his nose, "is she nice?"

Will Cure Consumption.

To all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery, and will send the recipe—FREE OF CHARGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

1st. Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

2nd. This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. Cartwright said he could not remember distinctly in the absence of public documents, but he believed that in 1854 it was about $20,000,000 or $25,000,000. The old Province of Canada went into confederation with a debt of $67,000,000. In November 1863, when Sir John left office, the Dominion debt was about $140,000,000, which included the liabilities of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia, for which Sir John was not responsible.

Mr. Warner being then moved out of the chair, a vote of thanks, through Mr. Cartwright, was passed to him for his management of the meeting, which vote was carried and the meeting dispersed with cheers for the Queen.

THE "THEFT ACCOUNT"

A HOTEL KEEPER'S EXPERIENCE.

"Steal!" said the old man, in accents of intense scorn. "Steal! Why, you would be astonished to find how large a proportion of the travelling public are infernal thieves. They steal the bed-clothing, pillows, boot-jacks, soap, soap-dishes—everything, in fact, which they can carry off. Everybody steals soap. We expect that, and don't kick. You'd be surprised to hear that—a noted Indiana politician makes a practice of putting the soap into his valise every time he pays his bill. He doesn't seem to us much of it himself, but I think he takes it home to his children. The first thing to be done when a fellow comes to the office to pay his bill is to send the porter up to his room to see if anything is missing. When a fellow comes down with a valise in his hand we are unusually suspicious. The only way to get even with the thieves is to keep a 'thief account.' Whenever anything is missed I charge it up at a fair value, and the next time I catch a thief in the act I make him pay the entire amount or go to gaol. One day a nice-looking fellow came down with a valise in his hand, and I inquired the amount of his bill. The minute I saw him I knew he had stolen something, so I rang the bell and gave the porter the wink. I pattered about the books while the porter was gone, and I could see he was getting uneasy. He had a notion to bolt, but just then the porter came down, and I saw by his eye that something was missing. I jumped over the counter and

Lady Adeliza went away to look for accounts, and the duchess sat on a rock and reflectively scratched her head.

They determined that she should wed the Prince d'Orang-Outang. The duke proposed the matter to the prince.

"Aw!" said the prince, as he adjusted his eye-glass; "is she nice?"

"She is beautiful," replied the duke.

"Aw!" said the prince; "give it much stamp."

"I will give her all Ethiopia," replied the duke.

"I will—aw—step down, and—aw—look at it," murmured the prince, carelessly. "My surprise, you know."

This was agreed upon, and the duke departed.

The prince knew his worth. He was quite white, and was not troubled with the slightest particle of caudal appendage; but Ethiopia was a big prize, and he resolved to win it. One week after the duke had offered his daughter, the prince started for Senegambia, with the intention of looking at the fair face of Adeliza.

CHAPTER III.

The prince was wandering through the woods of Senegambia, gayly singing,

"I would be a butterfly,
Born in a bower."

When his eyes fell upon a lovely chimpanzee sitting in a shallow brook sucking a cucumber. She was the loveliest creature he had ever seen. His heart was touched at once. He raised his eye-glass and stared at her till her eyes fell in modest confusion.

"Fair chimpanzee," said he, "wilt not—aw—tell me your—aw—name?"

"Adeliza," whispered she.

The Duchess de Chimpanzee, who had witnessed the meeting from behind a clump of bushes, chuckled, and slid off on her tail.

"Adeliza," sighed the prince, "thou art aw—beautiful. Wilt thou—aw—marry me?"

The Lady Adeliza threw the remains of her cucumber at the head of a chimpanzee who was loafing in a neighboring tree, fell into the arms of the prince, and gently murmured, "I am thine."

They were married in great splendor. The Right Rev. Bishop Baboon, assisted by Rev. Simiader Ape, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaids wore their natural clothes. The choir sang the lovely anthem, "Monkey married the Baboon's Sister." Lady Adeliza and her parents rubbed noses, and then the bride started on her tour on an elephant with one trunk.

The seasons changed; summer lapsed into autumn, autumn into winter, winter into spring. Then there was a great rejoicing for the Lady Adeliza gave the prince an heir. The child, however, was an anomaly in that region. It had no tail; it had flat feet; it had a white skin; it had no hair on its body. All the wise men examined it. It was not an orang-outang; it was not a chimpanzee; evidently it was a new species. Then a family conclave was called. "What shall we call it?" asked everybody. The Duchess de Chimpanzee, who was languidly making mud pies, said, "Let us call it—man."

Mitchell's Belladonna Improved India Rubber Porous Plaster.

There never has been a time when the healing of so many different diseases has been caused by outward application as the present. It is an undisputed fact that over half of the entire population of the globe resort to the use of ordinary plasters.

The principal ingredients used in making these Plasters are Gum Olibanum—or better known as the Frankincense of the Bible—Rubber and Burgundy Pitch, which, when scientifically compounded, is full of electricity, and when combined with the pure medicinal gums, is found to be one of the greatest healing mediums ever brought before the human race.

They are acknowledged by all who have used them to act quicker than any other Plaster they ever before tried, and that one of these Plasters will do more real service than a hundred of the ordinary kind. All other plasters are slow of action, and require to be worn continually to effect a cure; but with these it is entirely different; the instant one is applied the patient will feel its effect.

They possess all the soothing, warming, supporting and strengthening qualities of all other Plasters. Many who have been relieved of RHEUMATISM, TIC DOLOREUX, and various other pains in the HEAD, EYES, BREAST, or SIDE, and believe it is solely done by the electrical qualities which the Porous Plasters contain, and which is imparted to the system, thus restoring them to a healthy condition.

They are very soft and pliable, still very adhesive, and a sure cure for WEAK BACKS, PAINS IN THE SIDE AND BREAST; and are invaluable to those who have a COLIC of long standing, and often prevents CONSUMPTION. Some even tell us they believe they were entirely cured by the use of them of a long-continued Consumption.

Will Cure Consumption.

TO all suffering from the following diseases a ray of hope is offered through the kindness of a missionary friend who has sent me the formula of a pure vegetable medicine which has long been used by the native medicine men of Hindostan:—for the positive and radical cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Throat and Lung difficulty, General Debility, Loss of Manhood and all Nervous Affections, its power has been tested in hundreds of cases without a failure. I now feel it my sacred duty as far as possible to relieve human misery and I will send the recipe—FREE OF CHARGE—to any person who may desire it with directions for using. Sent by return mail by addressing with 2 stamps naming this paper, Dr. O. R. Brigham, Drawer 28, Utica, N. Y. 19-17.

THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY.

WE have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culvertwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Inequality, Impediments to Marriage, etc., resulting from excesses.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, of this admirable Essay clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequence may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

A Few Short Years.

A few short years—and then
What changes Time hath wrought!
So strange they seem, we scarce can deem
The world, our life, ourselves are aught.
But one long fitful dream.
The clouds that fly
Across the sky,
Waves tossed upon the sea,
Shadows that pass
Before a glass,
Our fitting emblem be.

A few short years—and then
Where are the hopes that shone
When youth with flowers enwreathed the
And earth had but one music tone
Of joy for us and ours?

The rainbow's hues,
The morning's dews,
The blossoms of a day,
The trembling sheen
On waters seen
More stable are than they.

A few short years—and then
Where is the adamant chain
That passion wrought, and madly thought
Nor time nor change could ever strain,
Till life's last strife was fought?

A rope of sand,
A gossamer band;
The filmy threads at e'en
The spider weaves
Amongst the leaves
A firmer bond have been.

A few short years—and then
Where is Ambition's pile,
That rose so high against the sky,
O'ershadowing all around the while,
With its proud boast might vie?

A shadow's shade,
A card-house made
By children for their play;
The air-blown bells
That folly swells,
May vault a surer stay.

A few short years—and then
Where is the mighty grief
That rung the heart with torture's art,
And made it feel that its relief
Time's hand could ne'er impart?

A storm that's burst,
And done it worst.
Then left the heaven more clear
A light-mare dead,
With morning fled,
These sorrows now appear,

A few short years—and then
What of our life remains,
The smiles and tears of other years,
Of passion's joy, of sorrow's pains,
Ambition's hopes and fears?

A faded dream
To-day they seem,
Which memory scarce can trace
But seals they've set Shall time nor yet
Eternity efface!

CHAPTER II.

The artist's name was Wyndham; and determined that I would very soon, as a natural beginning, make some inquiries about this Mr. Wyndham; and, indeed, I began before I left the exhibition. I engaged the hall-keeper to have a glass with me at the nearest tavern, and when I got fully in conversation with him, asked carelessly where Mr. Wyndham lived, as I thought I had known him many years ago, giving a description of some entirely imaginary person. The hall-keeper said: "No, that was not the sort of man at all. Mr. Wyndham was," (here he described him) "and he doesn't live at the west end of London, as you said, sir, but at a place in Essex, not very far from Colchester." He knew where he lived, because he had several times posted letters to him at "The Mount." This was about all I got from the hall-keeper, but it was as much as I wanted.

I am not greatly in the habit of taking other people into my confidence, but this was altogether an exceptional case; so, after a little reflection, I went straight to the address John Lytherly had given me, and told him what I had seen. He, of course, introduced me to his wife, a very pretty dark-eyed young woman; and when I had told all, they exchanged looks less of surprise than triumph. "Oh, it is coming all right!" he exclaimed. "I knew the murder would cry out some day. And now you will have a little more respect for Indian fortune tellers." "I am not quite sure about that," I said. "But don't you go making so certain that we are going to find out anything, Mr. Lytherly; this may be only an accidental resemblance." Because, as you may suppose, I had not told them how confident I felt in my own mind.

"Accidental! Nonsense!" was all he said to that; and then he asked me what was the first step I proposed to take. I told him that I thought we ought to go down to this village and see if we could learn anything suspicious about this Mr. Wyndham; and by my old detective habits, and the way in which the officers about would be sure to help me, I thought we might reckon on finding out what was wanted. He was delighted, and asked when we should start, and when I said that very night he was more delighted still.

It is always my rule to strike the iron while it's hot, and nothing could possibly be got by waiting now; so I had made up my mind just to run home, get a few things in my bag, and go down by the 10 o'clock train. My wife, you may be sure, was very much astonished; but as I expected she would be, was just as confident in the murder being found out as young Lytherly himself. Of course, the latter was ready. And we were put down at our destination about 12 o'clock; too late for anything that night, but still we were on the spot to begin the first thing in the morning, and accordingly, began the first thing after breakfast. Poetry.

A Few Short Years.

A few short years--and then
What changes Time hath wrought!
So strange they seem, we scarce can deem
The world, our life, ourselves are sought.
But one long fateful dream.

The clouds that fly
Across the sky,
Waves tossed upon the sea,
Shadows that pass
Before a glass,
Our fitting emblem be.

A few short years--and then
Where are the hopes that shone
When youth with flowers enwreathed the hours,
And earth had but one music tone
Of joy for us and ours?

The rainbow's hues,
The morning's dew,
The blossom of a day,
The trembling sheen
On waters seen
More stable are than they.

A few short years--and then
Where is the adamant chain
That passion wrought, and madly thought
Nor time nor change could ever strain,
Till life's last strife was fought?

A rope of sand,
A gossamer band;
The filmy threads at ee'n
The spider weaves
Amongst the leaves
A firmer bond have been.

A few short years--and then
Where is Ambition's pile,
That rose so high against the sky,
O'ershadowing all around the while,
With its proud boast might vie?

A shadow's shade,
A card-house made
By children for their play;
The air-blown bells
That folly swells
May vault a surer stay.

A few short years--and then
Where is the mighty grief
That pang the heart with torture's art,
And made it feel that its relief
Time's hand could ne'er impart?

A storm that's burst,
And done its worst,
Then left the heaven more clear;
A night-mare dread,
With morning fled,
Those sorrows now appear,

A few short years--and then
What of our life remains,
The smiles and tears of other years,
Of passion's joy, of sorrow's pains,
Ambition's hopes and fears?

A faded dream
To-day they seem,
Which memory scarce can trace--
But seals they're set Shall time nor yet
Eternity efface!

I couldn't go back to Lytherly for a little while; it was all so wonderful; and I was so angry with myself for never having thought at the time that the man who, of all others in the world, had the most to gain by the poor woman's death, might have been the one who killed her. In the bitterness of my feeling I could not help saying that any one but a detective would have pounced upon this fellow at the first. However, I got over the vexation, and went back to Lytherly to tell him my news. We were each confident that we had the right scent now; but yet it was not easy to see what we were to do. I could not very well apply for a warrant against a man because he had painted a picture; and so we walked and talked until we could think of nothing better than going down to Combstead, and without our fresh information to help us, seeing if we could not rake up something there.

We came to this resolution just as we reached a toll-gate, close by which stood a little house, which appeared to be the beer shop, baker's, Post Office, and grocer's for the neighborhood. Not much of a neighborhood, by the by, for, excepting a few gentlemen's seats, there was hardly another house within sight. One small but comfortable-looking residence, we were informed by the chatty old lady who owned the "store," was the Mount, where Mr. Parkway lived. He was a very retired, silent sort of a gentleman, she said, and people thought his wife didn't have the happiest of lives with him. He had been married for a few years, the old lady went on; soon after a relation had died, and left him a good bit of money. Before that he only rented apartments in the village; but then he married Miss Dellar, who was an orphan, with a good bit of money, too, but quite a girl to him, and they went to live at the Mount. At this point the old lady broke suddenly off, and said; "Here they are!" going to the door immediately, and dropping her very best courtesy. We followed her into the little porch; and there, sure enough, was a low carriage, drawn by one horse, and in it sat a gloomy, dark man, whom I had no difficulty in recognizing, and by his side a slight, very pretty, but careworn-looking young woman. Mr. Parkway looked coolly enough at us, and we as carelessly returned his glance, for we were both so much changed since the Combstead days that there was little fear of his remembering us.

It seemed they had called about a servant, which the Post office keeper was to have recommended, and Mrs. Parkway alighted from the carriage to write some memorandum on the business. Park-

He has been trying to drive my poor young mistress, that I nursed when a baby, into her grave, and he would have done it if I had not been here. The only excuse is, he is, and always has been, a dangerous lunatic."

We drove off, and I saw no more of her, and never heard how Mrs. Parkway took the intelligence;

CHAPTER II.

The artist's name was Wyndham; and determined that I would very soon, as a natural beginning, make some inquiries about this Mr. Wyndham; and, indeed, I began before I left the exhibition. I engaged the hall-keeper to have a glass with me at the nearest tavern, and when I got fully in conversation with him, asked carelessly where Mr. Wyndham lived, as I thought I had known him many years ago, giving a description of some entirely imaginary person. The hall-keeper said: "No, that was not the sort of man at all. Mr. Wyndham was," (here he described him); "and he doesn't live at the west end of London, as you said, sir, but at a place in Essex, not very far from Colchester." He knew where he lived, because he had several times posted letters to him at "The Mount."
This was about all I got from the hall-keeper, but it was as much as I wanted.
I am not greatly in the habit of taking other people into my confidence, but this was altogether an exceptional case;
so, after a little reflection, I went straight to the address John Lytherly had given me, and told him what I had seen. He, of course, introduced me to his wife, a very pretty dark-eyed young woman;
and when I had told all, they exchanged looks less of surprise than triumph. "Oh, it is coming all right!" he exclaimed. "I knew the murder would cry out some day. And now you will have a little more respect for Indian fortune tellers."
"I am not quite sure about that," I said. "But don't you go making so certain that we are going to find out anything, Mr. Lytherly; this may be only an accidental resemblance." Because, as you may suppose, I had not told them how confident I felt in my own mind.
"Accidental! Nonsense!" was all he said to that; and then he asked me what was the first step I proposed to take. I told him that I thought we ought to go down to this village and see if we could learn anything suspicious about this Mr.
Wyndham; and by my old detective habits, and the way in which the officers about would be sure to help me, I thought we might reckon on finding out what was wanted. He was delighted, and asked when we should start, and when I said that very night he was more delighted still.
It is always my rule to strike the iron while it's hot, and nothing could possibly be got by waiting now; so I had made up my mind just to run home, get a few things in my bag, and go down by the 10 o'clock train. My wife, you may be sure, was very much astonished; but as I expected she would be, was just as confident in the murder being found out as young Lytherly himself. Of course, the latter was ready. And we were put down at our destination about 12 o'clock; too late for anything that night, but still we were on the spot to begin the first thing in the morning, and accordingly, began the first thing after breakfast. John Lytherly would have begun before breakfast, but, as an old hand, I knew better than that; because the party we were after, allowing he was the right party, after a five years' rest, wasn't going to bolt now; so it was no case for hurrying and driving. Well, soon after breakfast, I sauntered into the bar, and began talking with the landlord, who was an elderly sort of party about my own age, and who bragged—as if it was a thing to be proud of—before we had talked three minutes, that he had liyed, man and boy, old lady went on; soon after a relation had died, and left him a good bit of money. Before that he only rented apartments in the village; but then he married Miss Dellar, who was an orphan, with a good bit of money, too, but quite a girl to him, and they went to live at the Mount. At this point the old lady broke suddenly off, and said, "Here they are!" going to the door immediately, and dropping her very best courtesy. We followed her into the little porch; and there, sure enough, was a low carriage, drawn by one horse, and in it sat a gloomy, dark man, whom I had no difficulty in recognizing, and by his side a slight, very pretty, but careworn-looking young woman. Mr. Parkway looked coolly enough at us, and we as carelessly returned his glance, for we were both so much changed since the Combestead days that there was little fear of his remembering us.

It seemed they had called about a servant, which the Post office keeper was to have recommended, and Mrs. Parkway alighted from the carriage to write some memorandum on the business. Parkway had never spoken, and I thought I could see in his harsh features traces of anxiety and remorse. Lytherly had followed Mrs. Parkway into the shop, and as I could see from where I stood, on the lady asking for a pen, he drew his gold pencil-case from his pocket, and offered it, as probably containing a better implement than any the Post office could afford. The lady stared, looked a little startled, but after a moment's hesitation, accepted it with a very sweet smile.
While Mrs. Parkway was engaged in writing her letter, Lytherly stood by her side, and sauntered out after her. I had been waiting in the porch, watching her husband whose face was so familiar to me that I half expected to see a look of recognition come into his eyes; but nothing of the sort happened. Lytherly watched them drive off, then turning suddenly round, exclaimed: "It's as good as ever, Robinson! We've got them!"
"Why, what is there afresh?" I asked.
"Just sufficient to hang the scoundrel," said Lytherly. "You remember, of course, that among other things which were stolen on the night of the murder was a curious locket which poor Miss Parkway used to wear, and that some fragments of the chain were afterwards found."
I remembered this very well, and told him so.
"Very good," he continued. "I gave that locket and chain to the poor old girl;
it was the only valuable I possessed in the world; and Mrs. Parkway has the central carbuncle in her brooch now."
"Nonsense!" I exclaimed, not knowing exactly what I did say at the moment.
"It is a fact," he said, "and I can swear to it. What is more to the point, perhaps, is that although the stone is in a strange setting, and no one but myself, probably, could recognize it, yet I can identify it. On the one side are my initials cut in almost microscopical characters. If they are there, that settles it;
if they are not put me down as an impos-ter, and fix the murder on me if you like."
There was a good deal more said after this, but the upshot of it was that we went over to Colchester, and laid the matter before the authorities; when, after a hesitation, a warrant was granted for the apprehension of Mr. Philip Parkway; and two officers, accompanied by Lytherly and myself, went over to execute it.
It was after nightfall when we arrived at the Mount; and on knocking at the door, we found that Mr. Parkway was in;
but his wife was out, having gone up (so the elderly woman that was called by the foot-boy informed us) to play the harmonium at the weekly rehearsal of the village choir. "About the only amusement she has, poor thing," the woman muttered, and she seemed in a bad temper about something. We said we wanted to see her master, and that she need not announce us. And, as I live, I believe that woman guessed directly who we were, and what we had come for. At any rate quite a glow of triumph came into her face, and she pointed to a door nearly opposite to where we stood. We opened it, habits, and had made some inquiries there. Strangely enough, the man who was head porter there five years ago (it is a very sensible way railroads have of keeping a good man in the same position always; promotion generally upsets and confuses things), and he was able, by secondary facts, to fix the dates and to that not only did Mr. Parkway go to Combestead for the funeral, but that he went to London and back just before;

from London, of course, he could easily get to Combestead and his absence left him about time to do so. We proposed then to have a remand and get evidence from Combestead; but it was never needed.
Parkway had been expecting this blow for years, and always kept some deadly poison concealed in the hollow of his watch-seal. This he took on the night after his examination, and was found dead in his cell by the officer who went the rounds. He first wrote a very long and minute confession, or rather justification, showing that his motive had been to prevent his cousin's marriage with Lytherly, whom he seemed to hate very much, although the young man had never harmed him. He said he went expressly to Combestead to get possession of the money his misguided relative had drawn, and to kill her; so in doing this he felt he had committed no crime, but had only been an instrument of justice. So I suppose he was, as the housekeeper declared, a dangerous lunatic.
However, the reward of £100 had never been withdrawn, and I got it; it was paid out of Parkway's estate, too, which was about the strangest case I ever heard of. Lytherly and his wife are great friends with Mrs. Robinson and myself; indeed, we have usually one of their young ones staying with us, when we haven't one or two from my married daughter. Mrs. Parkway, I heard, sold off at the Mount, and went away; and sometime after, I saw by the papers, that she was married to some one else. I hope she made a better match the second time.
On the whole, on looking back, I am inclined to think that of all the clues by which I ever found anybody out, this was really the queerest.—Cham's Jour.

On Saturday last a young lady living in the vicinity of Port Dover met with an accident which nearly cost her life. While examining a drawer in which her father keeps blasting material, she found an innocent looking article which turned out to have been a cartridge containing nitro-gly-nitro-glycerine with a needle, when it exbesides badly mangleing the palms of both hands and burning the face.

Poetry.

John Lothrop Motley.

Sleep, Motley, with the great of ancient days,
Who wrote for all the years that yet shall be.
Sleep with Herodotus, whose name and praise
Have reached the isles of earth's remotest sea.
Sleep, while, defiant of the slow decay
Of Time, thy glorious writings speak for thee
And in the answering heart of millions raise
The generous zeal for Right and Liberty.
And should the days o'ertake us, when, at last,
The silence that—ere yet a human pen
Had traced the slenderest record of the past—
Hushed the primal languages of men—
Upon our English tongue its spell shall cast,
Thy memory shall perish only then.

Cutting Grafts.

It is often more convenient to cut grafts late in autumn than in winter, and it is better to do it now, if the young shoots are likely to be in danger of injury by the intense cold of winter. The work may be done to advantage at any time after the leaves drop, or the leaves, if still on, are quickly stripped off at this time of the year. Tie them up neatly, label them distinctly, and pack them away in a cool cellar in damp moss.

Cuttings of Currants and Gooseberries for propagating the sorts, should be taken off in autumn. If put out in beds before winter sets in, and protected with a layer of fine manure, two inches thick, they will be more likely to start freely in spring than by the common treatment.

When thus set out, the earth should be very closely pressed about them, leaving no interstices or crevices. The manure on them will enrich the bed, and is sure to start them vigorously.

Keeping Apples.

Apples placed in dry sawdust would keep better than exposed, as the sawdust would exclude unequal currents of air and maintain a more uniform temperature, and it would also absorb decayed portions and prevent their spreading to other apples. The temperature should be quite cold, or nearly at freezing, at which point the dry sawdust would serve to prevent danger from actual frost. Nearly the same effect would be produced by placing in tight-barrels. Damp sawdust in a warm cellar, would hasten decay.

Covering Flower Beds,

which contain half tender bulbs and shrubs, such as hyacinths and roses, is very easily and neatly effected with evergreen branches. Let them be cut nearly equal in length, and begin at the outside and place them tops outward in a neat circle if the bed is round, and on these lay the next circle, and so on till the bed is covered. They will thus become a real

We drove off, and I saw no more of her, and never heard how Mrs. Parkway took the intelligence;

The lady was present at the prelimi- nary examination, and to her great surprise her carbuncle brooch was taken from her and used against her husband. This examination was on the next morning, and we obtained more evidence than we had at first expected. Not only was the carbuncle marked as Lytherly had said it would be, but I had been up at the station, being unable to shake off old habits, and had made some inquiries there. Strangely enough, the man who was head porter there five years ago (it is a very sensible way railroads have of keeping a good man in the same position always; promotion generally upsets and confuses things), and he was able, by secondary facts, to fix the dates and to that not only did Mr Parkway go to Combestead for the funeral, but that he went to London and back just before; from London, of course, he could easily get to Combestead and his absence left him about time to do so. We proposed then to have a remand and get evidence from Combestead; but it was never needed.

Parkway had been expecting this blow for years, and always kept some deadly poison concealed in the hollow of his watch-seal. This he took on the night after his examination, and was found dead in his cell by the officer who went the rounds. He first wrote a very long and minute confession, or rather justification, showing that his motive had been to prevent his cousin's marriage with Lytherly, whom he seemed to hate very much, although the young man had never harmed him. He said he went expressly to Combestead to get possession of the money his misguided relative had drawn, and to kill her; so in doing this he felt he had committed no crime, but had only been an instrument of justice. So I suppose he was, as the housekeeper declared, a dangerous lunatic.

However, the reward of £100 had never been withdrawn, and I got it; it was paid out of Parkway's estate, too, which was about the strangest go I ever heard of. Lytherly and his wife are great friends with Mrs. Robinson and myself; indeed, we have usually one of their young ones staying with us, when we haven't one or two from my married daughter. Mrs. Parkway, I heard, sold off at the Mount, and went away; and sometime after, I saw by the papers, that she was married to some one else. I hope she made a better match the second time.

On the whole, on looking back, I am inclined to think that of all the clues by which I ever found anybody out, this was really the queerest.—Cham's Jour.

The Port Hope "Guide" declares that the Committee appointed by the Town Council to investigate the charges made in that paper against the Chief Constable is composed of men who have already publicly committed themselves favourably to the accused officer. The "Guide" makes the following proposition, which appears to be a fair one: "If the Council will follow the example set in Lindsay, a short time since, when trying their late Chief, and appoint a judge before whom witnesses will be obliged to give evidence under oath, and before a Court which will reject all irrelevant evidence, and at the same time keep down the effervescent enthusiasm of the crowd Marshall is sure to have around him in any other public place, we pledge ourselves to give him all the evidence he wants for the remainder of his days as to his neglect of duty."

Pumpkin Pie.

A ripe, deep-colored, thick-fleshed, fine-grained pumpkin. Divide in halves, remove seeds, cut in small pieces, take off the skin, put in vessel and stew slowly with very little water, till quite dry: stir often, especially at the last, for fear of scorching. Do not drain the juice off, as that is the sweetest part of the pumpkin. While hot, sift through a colander; add a small piece of butter, and to 4 quarts of pumpkin use 4 eggs, 3 cupfuls of sugar, 1 tablespoonful of ginger, 1/2 tablespoonful of cinnamon and one quart of good milk. Bake slowly with one crust.—NODDY BOFFIN.

Geraniums.

Directions are continually repeated, to take up geraniums, wash the roots, and hang them up without any covering in a cellar till spring. This may do where the precise degree of moisture exists in the cellar, which is not probably the case with one cellar in twenty, and we have never yet been able to meet the person who has been thus successful. Instead of this unnatural mode, we adopt a treatment, formerly explained, as near like keeping them in a cool green-house as practicable. They are taken up, roots and tops trimmed, and set closely in boxes containing an inch or two of damp sawdust at the bottom. Damp sawdust is then sifted and shaken all through the roots. The boxes are placed near the largest cellar window. Watering two or three times will keep the sawdust damp till spring. They are then set in a hot-bed and started, and when placed in beds, bloom profusely all summer.

We have never succeeded well in transplanting strawberries at any time in autumn, unless the plants are removed short distances with a ball of soil on the roots. Mr. Agassiz says that in certain Amazonian tribes, on the day of his marriage, while the wedding-festivities are going on, the bridegroom's hands are tied up in a paper bag with fire-ants. If he bears the torture smilingly and unmoved, he is considered fit for the trials of matrimony.

Logic is very simple when properly explained. Thus the premises of a proposition are that you have a door with a key-hole in it and prompted by fancy you blow pepper through it with the bellows. If the next day the servant appears with her eye in a bandage, the inference is she was peeping into the room at an unfortunate moment.

A boy came along to one of our neighbors' houses holding a very dirty dog, and asked the gentleman of the house: "Don't you want to buy a dog, Mister?" "What kind of a dog is it?" asked the gentleman. "The boy looked puzzled. "Well," said he, "it is part terrier." "And wat is the rest?" asked the gentleman. "The rest," answered the boy, "why, the rest is—is—just dog."

A Dog, a Man and a Mule.

A North Carolina wagoner sold his dog to a Lawrence County man the other day for a half a barrel of sorghum syrup. The dog, however, refused to be sold, and took refuge under the wagon. Lawrence County man crawled after him, with a piece of meat in one hand and a rope in the other. Although there were several spectators of the scene that ensued it is difficult to get at the facts. All agree that there was a scuffle under the wagon, accompanied by yells; but no one is willing to affirm that the man had the dog or the dog had the man. Finally, the dog as it would seem, brushed up against the hind legs of the mule, and then all was still. It is not certain what killed the dog. One of the spectators said he thought he heard a trace chain rattle, but when he went to examine the mule was asleep. The man had lost his hat, his coat, and the greater part of his trousers, and subsequent examination proved that the dog died with one ear and a handful of hair in his mouth.

Indications go to show that reason is beginning to exert an influence in the strikes which have afflicted England so frequently during the past. Lord Moncrieff, who was chosen arbitrator in the dispute between the Clyde operative shipwrights and their employers, Thursday gave his decision in favour of the latter, on the ground that the state of trade does not warrant an advance of wages.

The Daily News of Oct. 23 says:—There was again a large quantity of fresh meat landed at Liverpool last week from the United States and Canada, and though the recent gales have had the effect of prolonging the voyages of most of the vessels, the meat on arrival, with one exception, was in very good condition. The exception was a consignment of about five tons of beef, brought by the Cunard steamer Maratutta from Boston. The vessel encountered the full fury of the storm, and the meat which was suspended by hooks, became detached, allowing the salt water to reach and seriously affect it.

Cut down with a sharp spade on the four sides of the plant, and then lift out the square block and carry it on the spade and reposit it in a square hole previously made to receive it. Although the roots of the plants are often two or three feet long, and many are thus cut off, yet enough are left for the plants to grow with but little check. If more expedition and less care are desired, the balls of earth may be smaller, and may be carried in a wheelbarrow or basket; and such will succeed tolerably well. All these different modes are of course intended for limited garden culture.

An enthusiast iz an individual who beleaves about four time az much az he kan prove, and about four times az much az cunny boddylse beleaves.

Too long courtships are not always judicious; the partys often tire out skoreing before the trot begins.

Nature seldom makes a phool, she simply furnishes the raw materials, and lets the fellow finish the job to suit himself.

Young man, learn to wait. If yu undertake to set a hen before she iz ready, yu will lose your time and confuze the hen besides.

One quart of cheap whiskey—the cheaper the better—judiciously applied will do more business for the devil than the smartest deakon he has got.
